

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

600078266Z

DINNERS AND DINNER-PARTIES.

DINNERS
AND DINNER-PARTIES.

G. V.

PUBLISHED FOR THE AUTHOR.

LONDON:
CHAPMAN AND HALL, 193, PICCADILLY.
1862.

250 f 46

TO THE READER.

---

THE THREE MILLION SEVEN HUNDRED AND FORTY-FIVE THOUSAND FOUR HUNDRED AND SIXTY-THREE HOUSEWIVES OF ENGLAND AND WALES may read this book to their improvement, and although there are statements that may cause them to blush, there is nothing but what their daughters may read

The yachtsmen, the sportsmen, and the bachelors will find many rules for creature comforts, and will learn how to avoid the evils that destroy the pleasures of life, and send them early to eternity.

The Legislature will find suggestions worthy of attention, although it may not think proper to return to the penalties of the statute of 22 Henry VIII., under which two cooks—viz. John Roose and Margaret Davy—were boiled to death.

The impostor dinner-givers have not been forgotten, their dinners and guests are described, their servants portrayed, and their hospitality commented on.

The fallacy of the supposed fortunes of the English females is shown from the Government tables for the year 1858.

The gentlewoman and her model kitchen are described—AND LADIES OF NEGLECTED EDUCATION MAY LEARN HOW TO COOK THEIR VICTUALS.

The art of preserving life is shown, and instructions given, for the choice of dinners which may be chosen in a few minutes at any season of the year.

G. V.

January, 1862.

CONTENTS.

---

CHAPTER I.

	PAGE
In Germany, Holland, France, and Spain, the Ladies of the Upper Class regulate the Ménage . . . . .	1

♦ CHAPTER II.

The Education of the Middle-Class English Women false . . .	4
---	---

CHAPTER III.

In England the Ladies are taught to despise the Art of Cookery.	10
---	----

CHAPTER IV.

Misery of those that attempt to imitate Belgravia . . . .	16
---	----

CHAPTER V.

False notions of the Ladies of 1860 . . . . .	20
---	----

CHAPTER VI.

Persons should be Educated or Instructed in the Preparation of Food in every Workhouse and all Schools; and, finally, Diplomas should be granted by the Educational Council . . .	27
---	----

CHAPTER VII.

	PAGE
Dinner-Parties to be avoided . . . . .	36

CHAPTER VIII.

THE ART OF PROLONGING LIFE.

The Gentlewoman and her Ménage . . . . .	46
The Model Kitchen . . . . .	50
Importance of Cleanliness . . . . .	53
Disadvantages of a Model Kitchen . . . . .	ib.
The choosing a Dinner . . . . .	55
Potage, Fish, Meats, Poultry, Game, Sweets, and Vegetables.	56
Each Dish should be brought in separately . . . . .	ib.
Never wait Dinner . . . . .	57
Helping the Guests . . . . .	ib.
Wine . . . . .	ib.
The Guests . . . . .	58
A Continental Entertainment to Twelve Hundred Persons . .	59
Specimen of a good Club Dinner:
Two Potages, two Relevés, two Flancs, four Entrées,
Pièce de Milieu, two Rots, four Entremets, and Desserts.	60
Soups . . . . .	61
Pottages, or Soups . . . . .	62
Stews . . . . .	63
Julienne Soup . . . . .	ib.
A very old Cheshire Receipt, viz. of the Sixteenth Century, for a good and inexpensive Soup . . . . .	64
Hotch-Potch . . . . .	ib.
Irish Stew . . . . .	65
Hot-Pot . . . . .	66
Stewed Mutton Cutlets . . . . .	67
Curry . . . . .	ib.
Mutton Broth . . . . .	68
Fish . . . . .	ib.
Melted Butter . . . . .	69
A List of Fish to choose from . . . . .	ib.
Sole au Gratin . . . . .	72

CONTENTS.

ix

	PAGE
Sole à la maître d'hôtel . . . . .	73
Salmon . . . . .	74
Matelote of Salmon . . . . .	ib.
Oysters . . . . .	ib.
Oyster Sauce . . . . .	75
Fried Oysters . . . . .	ib.
Red Mullet . . . . .	76
Mussel Sauce . . . . .	ib.
Poultry and Game . . . . .	77
List of Game and Poultry . . . . .	78
Two Chickens for Eight Persons . . . . .	ib.
Pheasant . . . . .	80
Poultry . . . . .	82
Game . . . . .	ib.
Legs of Turkey . . . . .	83
Beef, Mutton, or Lamb . . . . .	ib.
Veal or Pork . . . . .	84
Boiling . . . . .	86
Roasting a Haunch of Venison . . . . .	88
Beef . . . . .	89
Mutton . . . . .	90
Veal . . . . .	ib.
Beef-Steak, or Mutton or Pork Chops, &c. . . . .	ib.
Sweets, Pastry, &c. . . . .	91
Sauce for Wild Ducks . . . . .	92
Tomato Sauce . . . . .	93
Salad . . . . .	ib.
Beetroot . . . . .	94
Mayonnaise . . . . .	ib.
Vegetables . . . . .	95
Eggs . . . . .	ib.
A Plain Omelette . . . . .	ib.
Omelette aux Fines Herbes . . . . .	96
Drinks . . . . .	ib.
Bottling . . . . .	97
Punch . . . . .	ib.
Cider-Cup . . . . .	ib.
A Cooling Drink . . . . .	98
Cherry Brandy . . . . .	ib.

	PAGE
To brew Pale Ale . . . . .	98
Preservation of Food . . . . .	ib.
Milk Preserving . . . . .	100
Indian Curry Powder . . . . .	ib.
A Spanish Cook's Receipt for boiling a Spanish Ham . .	101

DINNER AND DINNER-PARTIES.

---

CHAPTER I.

IN GERMANY, HOLLAND, FRANCE, AND SPAIN, THE LADIES OF THE UPPER CLASS REGULATE THE MÉNAGE.

AMONG the whole tribe of women called cooks, there are not ten that are worthy of their salt; there are plenty of books, but they are too ignorant or too idle to look at one, and, unfortunately, the ladies that are educated at the superficial places called boarding-schools or colleges are taught to believe that the art of cookery, which is their first and paramount duty, is a degrading occupation.

If a chapter of the introduction to Dr. Kit-chener's "Cook's Oracle" was daily read aloud at those places, every pupil would learn her duty, and the poor things that are turned into poor teachers, poor milliners, poor bonnet-builders, and poor shirt-makers, would be enabled to satisfy their hunger by an useful occupation; they would earn the

Cooks not worthy their salt.

Ladies taught to believe the art of cookery degrading, although it is their paramount duty.

Teachers, milliners, &c., if taught the art of cookery, would get a livelihood.

wages that are paid to the present class of cooks, who destroy the health of their employers, and shorten their existence.

Two-thirds of our food wasted.

It is a sad reflection on the women of England, that two-thirds of the food destined for the human stomach are utterly wasted, if not destroyed.

The ménage regulated abroad by the ladies of the upper class.

In Germany, in Holland, in France, and even in Spain, the housewives of the upper classes regulate the ménage, in which they take pleasure, it having formed part of the education of their girlhood. They have their model kitchens, where order, neatness, and cleanliness reign triumphant; where the bright cooking and porcelain saucepans attract the notice of the most superficial, and from whence is obtained, as if by magic, a prettily conceived dinner, fitted for the human stomach, increasing the gratification of the convives by the knowledge that the production is chemically clean, and perfect in its conception.

The gentle-
women study cooking as an intellectual employment.

They disdain the excessive desire of amusement.

The gentlewomen of those countries recognise the study of cookery with delight as an intellectual employment and refined pursuit, paramount to all their duties, more interesting than the study of chemistry. They disdain the excessive desire of amusement, which they know indisposes the mind to industry and is not favourable to civilisation; the gentlewomen of those countries know that every one of the great human family have their duties, and that the better educated are bound to set example to those below them. They avoid all the spiritless and crowded societies where a round

They avoid
spiritless and crowded societies.

THE GENTLEWOMEN AVOID LOW AMUSEMENTS. 3 of low and trifling amusements fills the hours of what are called entertainments.

In their model kitchen everything is chemically clean, nothing neglected or forgotten, economy studied, pretty and delicious dishes are conceived and made from what the English cook throws into her swill-tub.

In the model kitchen everything is clean.

CHAPTER II.

THE EDUCATION OF THE MIDDLE-CLASS ENGLISH WOMEN FALSE.

The middle class women of England placed in a false position by their education.

Boarding schools a preparation for a life of martyrdom.

THE middle-class women of England for the most part are by their education placed in a false position. The offshoots of nobility with only empty titles for their fortunes; baronets who never ought to have had the honour; knights without means; aspiring merchants; aspiring barristers, who had been better with a trade; aspiring vulgarity of all sorts, ay, and all the other classes, jostle with the tradesman; they are all diseased with selfish vanity, and they all try to imitate the upper five thousand; consequently, they diverge from the natural path in the education of their daughters, who are sent to those equivocal places called boarding-schools or colleges, to be prepared for a future life of martyrdom; where what is drummed into them is artificial or of no use, and if not immediately abandoned, is on marriage; some are taught to balance the body, to curtsy to a mock queen, to enter a mock carriage, to mount a mock horse, to be presented at a mock court; others learn things which it had been well for them they had never known; they are all, as it is called, educated; they are all dressed alike, and it is impossible to distinguish the one from the other, but if there is a preference, we should give it to the daughters of the tradesmen; many of these superficially-educated girls have to seek their livelihoods, and of necessity fall into the hopeless condition of that spiritless and friendless class called teachers of the nonsense they have acquired, and so it circulates until you find a pianoforte in nearly every lodging-house kitchen.

A piano in nearly every lodging-house
kitchen.

Many parents die, leaving their offspring without the means of subsistence; others become unfortunate, and then the poor girls are awakened to their miserably mistaken education; they struggle to live, they fight with poverty, but with such an education they are helpless, and fall victims to—their lives ending in misery. Who is to blame for this misery but the parents, who have kept up false appearances, probably under false hopes of getting their daughters married, and cheated their girls into stupid nonsense, fine sentiment, and nonsensical talking by the poor unfortunate creatures called governesses, who would be blessed if they had the happiness or the genuine sense of a milk-maid.

The result.

When a young lady's education is said to be finished, or what is called "come out," she knows not her pence nor multiplication tables, but—reckons with her fingers. She is as regardless of how a

When the young women "come out."
Their ignorance.

Market overstocked.

dinner can be produced, as a horse is regardless of how the corn falls into his manger. Is it very strange that cooks are scarce, but that the market is overstocked with teachers, milliners, bonnet-builders, shirt-makers, and all other kinds of starving creatures which such an education will produce? The melancholy reflection is, that from this class the entire social evil is supplied.

Social evil supplied.

Female education vicious.

That the female education of the present day is not calculated to make home happy, but on the contrary is vicious and repugnant to the feelings of modesty, cannot be denied; it is shown by the conduct of the young women that go annually to the sea-side watering-places, where they revel in stand-up indecency, male and female dancing together, so that the pickling is made the excuse for the exercise of the looseness of their morals; this is the result of their education. A clever authoress indecency.

Sea-side

Fredrika
Bremer.

writes: " 'Laziness is the devil's cushion.' Do not run much from home. One's own health is of more worth than gold. Many a marriage begins like the rosy morning, and then falls away like a snow-wreath. And why? Because the married pair neglect to be as well pleasing to each other after marriage as before. Endeavour always to please one another; but, at the same time, keep God in your thoughts. Lavish not all your love on to-day, for remember that marriage has its to-morrow likewise, and its day after to-morrow too! 'Spare,' as one may say, 'fuel for the winter.' Consider, my daughters, what the word 'wife' expresses. The married woman is the husband's domestic faith; in her hand he must be able to confide house and family; be able to entrust her with the key of his heart, as well as the key of his house. His honour and his home are under her keeping; his well-being is in her hand. Think of this!"—Fredrika Bremer.

The omissions in the education of boarding-school girls shorten their earthly existence; the very animals that have once been properly fed, refuse their food if not properly cooked; and the parrot, the cat, and the dog, are instances of intellect above the females educated at such schools, who if so ignorant can know nothing of comforts.

A century ago the art of cookery was fashionable among English girls and English wives, arithmetic was not despised, and every woman knew her pence and multiplication tables. The art of making wine, pickling, and preserving, were the gentlewoman's morning amusements. Their evenings were passed in innocence, with the distaff, preparing the yarn for the linen of the family, and in the making of their shoes,* their dresses, their laces, and frills, whilst one of the family played on the spinet; sometimes the evening ended in an innocent country dance, or a round game—the county ball was only witnessed once a year—to which they went modestly and decently attired; and in those days, when a parent died he was regretted, and left a fortune, that, when divided, was a respectable maintenance for each child.

Employment of English girls and wives a century ago.

* This continued to be a fashionable amusement until the beginning of the present century.

Employment now-a-days.

Now-a-days, the piano mania and reception-rooms are all that are thought of ; cookery is out of use, and only practised by the lower orders ; needles and thread are unknown, except in the hands of milliners and madames ; horses and grooms are patronised by ladies, who have not two farthings to rub together for fortunes ; fathers and mothers live at the very top of their incomes ; the mornings of their daughters are wasted in insipid frivolity, the evenings are passed at balls and waltzing exposures, or in witnessing the indecent Opera nudities ; and when the father dies he is not regretted—he leaves nothing to divide—the widow mostly goes into a lodging or an almshouse, and the young ladies are left with their faces only for their fortunes.

Smallness of the fortunes of the females of the present day.

Among the 10,302,873 women of England and Wales, there are not 100 whose estates or fortunes will exempt them from their household duties, and there are not 12,000 females whose fortunes amount to and exceed 10,000*l*. The statistics of the Prerogative Court and Bank of England are startling realities, and demonstrate how very small, how very insignificant, are the pittances of the remainder of those who assume the meretricious title of lady.

The Registrar-General's estimation for the year 1859 indicates how few fathers die worth a 1000*l*., and how very few worth 10,000*l*.

How frequently we hear people eloquently discussing the losses and miseries of an occasional bad harvest; but those losses and miseries are as nothing in comparison to the daily destruction of human food, occasioned by ignorance and pride in the process of its cookery: the confiscation amounts to six times the sum levied in the shape of poor-rates. There are 3,745,463 houses in England and Wales, consequently there are as many kitchens, and it is a very moderate calculation to average the waste and loss at 5*l.* per house.

The amount of food confiscated by ignorance and pride.

In this sum no calculation is made for doctors and apothecaries' bills, or the attendant expenses. Nor is the shortening of life, or the funeral expenses, taken into consideration.

CHAPTER III.

IN ENGLAND THE LADIES ARE TAUGHT TO DESPISE
THE ART OF COOKERY.

Our middle class forget that health and happiness depend on the manner in which food is prepared.

We consume 365 dinners yearly.

Victuals should be cooked fit for the human stomach.

Opinion of Dr. Cadogan.

THE middle-class English women forget that our health, our happiness, and our affairs depend on the manner in which our victuals is prepared, and they forget that each of us puts into his stomach three hundred and sixty-five dinners in the course of one revolution of the sun, and that it is important that such meals be free from the dirt, the verdigris, and the crock usually found in its cookery; and that it is of equal importance that our meats should be free from all kind of taint, and our vegetables free from decay.

The celebrated Dr. Cadogan, a physician of the last century, condemned the cookery as creating disease, shortening life, and enabling doctors to ride in coaches. He says:

“A mistake many cooks fall into is, that the flesh meat they cook is always overdone; if boiled too much, the juices are lost; if over-roasted, fried, or broiled, the action of the fire continued too long, changes the mild animal flesh into something of another quality, the fat is made bitter and rancid, which fire will always do by the sweetest oil, and the scorched outside of the lean dry and acrimonious. The less, therefore, all flesh meat undergoes the power of the fire the milder and wholesomer it is. I do not mean by this to recommend the customs of cannibals and Tartars, who eat raw flesh, or beasts of prey, that devour animals alive. We should learn that our meats cannot be wholesome for being, as some call it, thoroughly done; we should learn to like it with some of its red juices modified by the fire."

The dame of a man of independence should be proud of her position; she should try and remedy the evil that drives her husband to his club. If she be unable to give instructions, or be unable to read a cookery book, let her employ some one above the woman she employs to clean her street-door steps—a woman born in a shed, or under the lee of a brick-kiln, who, most probably, never tasted meat in the hole from whence she came. Common sense dictates that such a person ought not to be entrusted to cook anything beyond what is fitted for the pigsty.

A qualified person administers to health, to life, to pleasure, and economy, and is not a producer of insidious poisons, which undermine health and squanders property. Lord Kames said that to advance the luxury of the table to the acme of perfection there should be a cook for every dish,

The wife of a man of independence should be proud of her position.

Drives him to his club.

The cook should be some one above the woman who cleans the street-door steps.

A qualified cook administers to health, life, and economy.

as there was in ancient Egypt a physician for every disease.*

The cook should be able to read.

At all events, every cook should be educated so as to be able to read a book on cookery, and, instead of being at the bottom of the ladder, should take her place as the first person in the household.

If lady not qualified, a man-cook should be employed.

If the dame is incapable of giving instructions, let her employ a man-cook from Belgium. Although she will pay him 80*l.* a year,† she will save her husband at least 100*l.* a year in the food that will be saved; the doctor and apothecary's bills will no longer be necessary, and life will be prolonged. Such an example will be followed by other dames, and it will be the beginning of a new era, and save her daughter from the misery she herself has undergone; and above all let her teach her a little on the subject, and forbid her putting on a stupid face if a young man should ask her how long it took to boil an egg, and answer, "Really I don't know if it is one hour or two: which is it, ma?" And, shocking as it may appear, let her tell her daughter the dreadful truth—viz. that there are upwards of half a million females in England more than males, consequently the largest half of the human food is consumed by the female race, and that no woman should have the honour of becoming a housewife, or rising to the rank of * "Sketches of the History of Man," vol. ii. 103.

† The highest wages known there.

a gentlewoman, until she made herself acquainted with the culinary art, so as to be able to explain it to those she may have the good fortune to employ.

The author was present with a young lady who had been educated in the usual nonsense, when the footman entered and asked her mother if he could say a word to her in private ; the mother answered that she wished no secrets, and desired him to speak out ; he hesitating, she bid him to say what he had to say. He replied, "I think it right to tell you, mam, that cook was drunk last night, and, in pouring out the soup from the saucepan into the tureen, was ill, and before she could turn her head away from it, part of her illness went into the tureen." Cook was immediately called up, but, of course, the brute stoutly denied it. However, there was no doubt of the fact ; the footman said he did not like to disturb the party, so he wiped the edge of the tureen, and gave the soup a good stir. The lady, in great anguish, exclaimed, "Good Heavens ! I ate some of it !" and, being highly indignant, was not very gentle either to William for stirring the soup, or the cook for her addition to it. The young lady listlessly exclaimed, "I ate some of it ; but what a fuss you are making, mamma ! You know we must all eat a peck of dirt before we die." This young woman had received a college education, and was finished at Brighton at 200*l.* a year, besides extras.

A young lady of the present day.

How cooks flavour soup.

We must all eat a peck of dirt before we die.

Education has done nothing for the present race of women, who are shown by their dress to be fast, dirty, and indelicate in mind.

Miss Nightingale on female dress.

Education has done nothing for the ladies of the present day, they need only be judged by the standard of their dress.* The women and girls that mount what are commonly called pork-pies, or things with feathers stuck in them, are looked on by the men as fast young women, and not the images of modesty; the long gowns that trail up the filth of the pavement are taken to bespeak the dirtiness of the wearer; and the silly under-gear of iron and cane is said to be the sure sign of an indelicate and unchaste mind, because it is utterly impossible that any woman can be in ignorance of that which she exhibits when waltzing, stooping, mounting a staircase, getting into a carriage, or standing over the iron rails of fashionable shops. Florence Nightingale says: "It is, I think, alarming, peculiarly at this time, when the female ink-bottles are perpetually impressing upon us 'woman's particular worth and general missionariness,' to see that the dress of women is daily more and more unfitting them for any 'mission' or usefulness at all. It is equally unfitted for all poetic and all domestic purposes. A man is now a more handy and far less objectionable being in a sick-room than a woman. Compelled by her dress, every woman now either shuffles or waddles; only a man can cross the floor of a sick-room without shaking it. What is become of woman's light step—the firm, light, quick step we have been asking for? A nurse who rustles (I am speaking of nurses professional and unprofessional) is the horror of a patient, though perhaps he does not know why. The fidget of silk and crinoline, the rattling of keys, the creaking of stays and of shoes, will do a patient more harm than all the medicines in the world will do him good. The noiseless step of woman, the noiseless drapery of woman, are mere figures of speech in this day. Her skirts (and well if they do not throw down some piece of furniture) will at least brush against every article in the room as she moves. Fortunate it is if her skirts do not catch fire, and if the nurse does not give herself up a sacrifice, together with her patient, to be burnt in her own petticoats. I wish the Registrar-General would tell us the exact number of deaths by burning occasioned by this absurd and hideous custom. I wish, too, that people who wear crinoline could see the indecency of their own dress as other people see it. A respectable elderly woman stooping forward, invested in crinoline, exposes quite as much of her own person to the patient lying in the room as any opera dancer does on the stage. But no one will ever tell her this unpleasant truth."

* Especially, as one of our best authors says:

"A want of decency is a want of sense."

CHAPTER IV.

MISERY OF THOSE THAT ATTEMPT TO IMITATE BELGRAVIA.

Belgravia not to be copied.

MISERY is the doom of the middle-class ladies who try to imitate Belgravia, or the fashions of the women of the highest fortune; those people are a very small portion of the sex, and are entitled to the glory of their own follies.

Rotten-row.

There is sufficient evidence to demonstrate that the Amazons at that rendezvous, Rotten-row, are deeply stained with impurity, and the assemblage is the same in profligacy as that of the race-course—both are equally vicious, and are only equalled by the stimulants of the Opera in the perpetration of licentiousness.

Dinners
in Belgravia are unknown is at Maida-hill or St.
John's-wood.

In Belgravia hundreds live in a way quite inconsistent with the idea of wealth. "It is not all gold that glitters;" there is a great mixture among the inhabitants, there are many houses where a good dinner is as unknown as it is at Maida-hill or St. John's-wood; and, like those places, has its full share of gamblers and loose fish. Many of the tenements are hired only for the season, in which great shifts are made for the sake of trying to vie with the affluent. When the daughters are numerous, the skirt of one dress serves the several bodies of the family, enabling them to ring the changes, never appearing all in the same pattern, which is doffed the moment they arrive from any fête, and their uncomfortable scanty dinners are eaten in a five-and-sixpenny cotton. It is pitiable, although amusing, to see some of these attempts at greatness, riding hired screws, and followed by hired grooms, who are let out at half-a-crown an hour. They, like the nobility, mix with the gamblers and loose fish, and the three classes are jumbled together in the dissipated and fantastical pursuits of fashionable life.

Tenements only hired for a season.

When the season is over a general migration takes place; and, like Richardson's show-women, the young ladies fly to the region where it is thought business may be done. A gentlewoman inquired of the daughter of a baronet where her father's place was? (meaning his country mansion). She answered, "We have no regular place. We had a place last year in Scotland, but ma said there was no business to be done there, so we gave it up." The gentlewoman replied, "I did not think that your father was in trade." The young lady answered, "I don't mean that, I mean in the marriage line."

Migration when season is over.

Mrs. Jamieson, an authoress much and deservedly admired, writes: "It appears to me that Opinion of Mrs. Jamieson.

the condition of woman in society, as at present constituted, is false in itself, and injurious to them : that the education of woman, as at present conducted, is founded on mistaken principles, and tends to increase fearfully the sum of misery and error in both sexes."

Great excuse to be made in the fact that the gentlewomen have not been properly instructed in their household duties, which they are taught to think offensive.

If they had been, they would know how to avoid many of their miseries.

Careless in the character of servants.

Great excuse may be made for the women of England of the present century, in the fact that they have never been instructed, but, on the contrary, taught to consider their household duties as an offensive occupation. The kitchens, for the most part, are dark and underground, the iron utensils generally furnished are black and dirty, not fit to be handled any more than they are fitted for the purpose they are used.

If the middle-class women of England had been usefully educated, they would know how to avert many of the miseries of civilised life arising from bad and ignorant cooks, and they would have been spared many grievous trials and embarrassments of the most painful kind. The cook soon learns the extent of her mistress's knowledge, and advantage is taken accordingly. The evil is increased by the ladies themselves, who are careless in the matter of "character," consequently bad servants are enabled to circulate from house to house; but if the mistress would only give the true reason why the cook was discharged, we should have better cooking, less dirt, less dyspepsia, and more civility.

THE PAY OF A SOLDIER AND THAT OF A COOK. 19

The cooks are the sisters or cousins of the recruits of our army, who are paid one shilling per day, and no more, from which sevenpence is taken for their food. Not so with their sisters or cousins ; they are paid by a different scale, and unhappily there are no corporals to drill them, or occasionally they would be treated with a flogging, and a taste of solitary confinement, and a stoppage of their pay.

The pay of a soldier and that of his sister cook.

The banging of doors alone causes a frightful expenditure ; the continual concussion cracks the windows, and loosens all the frames and fittings of the house, rendering repairs necessary in less than half the time that would otherwise be required. They are so clumsy and heavy-handed that there is not a thing in the house but what bears evidence of their violence ; and that is not all, they cannot leave the locks alone—their religion is that robberies are perquisites. No burglars ever make an attempt but by the aid of some of the inmates.

Destruction by banging.

Burglary never attempted but by the aid of inmates.

CHAPTER V.

FALSE NOTIONS OF THE LADIES OF 1860.

THERE is a prevailing opinion among most females that they are exempt from household duties by reason of their property, and the smaller the property the stronger is the opinion.

Let every female consider what fortune she herself is entitled to, and then ponder over the tables of the spinsters, wives, and widows that died in the year 1858, and say how many of them could claim such an exemption; and let every female bear in mind that of 108,923 women that died in that year ONLY 9112 OF THEM DIED LEAVING ANY PROPERTY AT ALL, AND THAT OF VERY SMALL AMOUNT.

THE CENSUS OF 1861, SHOWS :

The population of men and women above 21 years of age, 1861.

The population of females above 21
years of age in England and Wales	10,302,873
The population of males above 21
years of age in England and Wales	9,758,852
	<hr/> 544,021

FORTUNES OF FEMALES THAT DIED IN 1858. 21

OF THE 9112 WOMEN THAT DIED IN 1858, LEAVING PROPERTY, THERE WERE:

The spinsters, wives, and widows that died in 1858.

Spinsters . . .	3371
Wives . . .	1202
Widows . . .	4539
	<hr/> 9112

The property left by each class was as follows:

3371 SPINSTERS DIED:

166	leaving property under the value of	£20	The pro-
698	£20 and under	100	perty that
809	100	300	the spin-
481	300	600	sters died
319	600	1000	worth.
308	1000	2000
267	2000	4000
108	4000	6000
53	6000	8000
47	8000	10,000
66	10,000	20,000
21	20,000	30,000
19	30,000	50,090
8	50,000	100,000
1	100,000 and upwards.

1202 WIVES DIED :

The property the wives died worth.	152 leaving property under the value of			£20
	500	£20	and under	100
	307	100	”	300
	118	300	”	600
	44	600	”	1000
	43	1000	”	2000
	23	2000	”	4000
	6	4000	”	6000
	3	6000	”	8000
	2	8000	”	10,000
	3	10,000	”	20,000
	1	20,000	”	30,000

4539 WIDOWS DIED :

The property the widows died worth.	301 left property under the value of			£20
	1024	£20	and under	100
	1113	100	”	300
	708	300	”	600
	426	600	”	1000
	411	1000	”	2000
	284	2000	”	4000
	93	4000	”	6000
	42	6000	”	8000
	33	8000	”	10,000
	65	10,000	”	20,000
	20	20,000	”	30,000
	13	30,000	”	50,000
	6	50,000.	”	100,000

PROPERTY OF THE MALES THAT DIED IN 1858. 23

Let the wives and daughters ponder over the property left by the 20,867 fathers that died in the year 1858, and say when the same was divided among the widows, the sons and the daughters, whether any of them could claim exemption from household duties, AND LET NO ONE FORGET THE FEARFUL TRUTH THAT FOR ONE MAN THAT DIES LEAVING PROPERTY, FOUR MEN DIE LEAVING NO PROPERTY.

The first is the list of peers, and persons bearing title, who died in 1858.

OF 90 PEERS OR PERSONS OF TITLE THAT DIED IN THAT YEAR :

4 died leaving property under the value of			£20	The peers and persons of title that died in 1858, and amount of property they died worth.
2	"	"	100
3	"	"	300
5	"	"	600
2	"	"	1000
10	"	"	2000
7	"	"	4000
5	"	"	6000
3	"	"	8000
15	"	"	20,000
9	"	"	30,000
10	"	"	50,000
15	"	"	100,000

THE PERSONS WHO DIED LEAVING PROPERTY
IN 1858 WITHOUT TITLE—viz. 20,778 :

The commoners that died in 1858, and the property they died worth.	1244 died leaving property under	£20
	3636                   "                   "	100
	4562                   "                   "	300
	2205                   "                   "	600
	1523                   "                   "	1000
	1572                   "                   "	2000
	1269                   "                   "	4000
	500                   "                   "	6000
	309                   "                   "	8000
	197                   "                   "	10,000
	413                   "                   "	20,000
	203                   "                   "	30,000
	141                   "                   "	50,000
	64                   "                   "	100,000
	50                   "                   "	100,000

and upwards

Let the wives and daughters of the persons who are chargeable with income-tax peruse and ponder over the following returns, and say how many are exempt from household duties.

The persons that pay income-tax, and the amounts of income they pay upon.

A RETURN SHOWING THE NUMBER OF PERSONS
CHARGED TO THE INCOME-TAX FOR THE YEAR ENDING ON THE 5TH DAY OF APRIL, 1860, UNDER SCHEDULE D.

Number of persons in each class :

16,978	under	£100	a year
128,570	. .	100 and under	£150
41,687	. .	150                   "	200

36,535	. .	£200 and under	£300
16,608	. .	300	„ 400
8130	. .	400	„ 500
6073	. .	500	„ 600
3468	. .	600	„ 700
2295	. .	700	„ 800
1965	. .	800	„ 900
901	. .	900	„ 1000
5932	. .	1000	„ 2000
1768	. .	2000	„ 3000
879	. .	3000	„ 4000
498	. .	4000	„ 5000
887	. .	5000	„ 10,000
512	. .	10,000	„ 50,000
59	. .	50,000 and upwards.

A RETURN SHOWING THE NUMBER OF PERSONS
CHARGED TO THE INCOME-TAX FOR THE YEAR ENDING ON THE 5TH DAY OF APRIL, 1860, UNDER SCHEDULE E.

Number of persons in each class :

22,121	under	£100 a year.
38,519	. .	100 and under £150
12,917	. .	150 „ 200
12,037	. .	200 „ 300
5271	. .	300 „ 400
2483	. .	400 „ 500
1475	. .	500 „ 600
749	. .	600 „ 700
574	. .	700 „ 800
382	. .	800 „

234	. .	£900 and under £1000
1380	. .	1000	2000
151	. .	2000	3000
53	. .	3000	4000
20	. .	4000	5000
71	. .	5000 and upwards.

Advertising genteel Beggars.

Having perused these tables, let mothers and daughters consider whether any of them are exempt from their household duties. And let them also reflect how often is seen in print advertisements calling for charity on behalf of a widow and daughters, who strengthen their appeal by "who once were in affluence;" and let the daughters consider the cause, and let the public refuse all such appeals as coming from persons who, if they had thought rightly would not have occasion to become genteel Beggars.

CHAPTER VI.

PERSONS SHOULD BE EDUCATED OR INSTRUCTED IN THE PREPARATION OF FOOD IN EVERY WORKHOUSE AND ALL SCHOOLS; AND, FINALLY, DIPLOMAS SHOULD BE GRANTED BY THE EDUCATIONAL COUNCIL.

THE 'bane of a gentleman's household is the want of educated domestic servants of character. There was a time when servants were devoted to their mistress, and lived their whole lives in one family. It used to be said that good mistresses made good servants. A good mistress meant one who understood her domestic duties, and was capable of instructing a servant when such instruction was required; and then ladies of rank wore white muslin aprons, and nothing passed in the house unknown to them. Now-a-days the opposite is the rule. There are few housewives that know anything at all of domestic duty, and there are no female servants of character fitted for the duties, although the females above twenty-one years of age number nearly six hundred thousand more than the male population, but not one in a hundred knows how to cook a potato.

The bane of a gentleman's household the want of respectable servants.

Good mistresses, what?

Half the married men wish themselves single.

Why the bachelors prefer to be single.

Is it to be wondered that half the married men wish themselves single, and that the bachelors dread the expenses and disagreeables of a home of discomfort, and prefer bachelor's comforts to the miseries of love in a cottage with a wife of fashionable education, or rather no education, and babies and drabs of nursemaids in perspective?

Every individual a victim to bad cookery.

There is scarcely an individual in the United Kingdom that is not the victim to dyspepsia, and, consequently, to misery and premature death, because the deputies that are appointed by the housewives are wholly incompetent to prepare any food, even for a hog. How can it be otherwise? They are taken from the very dregs of society out of hovels and rookeries, probably from the workhouse. It is notorious that when these creatures enter your kitchen they know not the purpose of the different utensils, which they always misuse. These are not the class of women that are required; they are dirty in the extreme, and know not what cleanliness means. Wives may think cleanliness in a cook is of no importance, but the chemist would tell her that the food should be chemically clean, or it is changed in character, and rendered unfit for the human stomach; and as to children, he would tell her that millions have been diseased for life, and millions have been killed in infancy, by dirty and improperly prepared food. There is scarcely a mother in the United Kingdom that is free from this charge, either through her own ignorance or the persons she has employed, and most persons labouring under disease may safely attribute it to the food they have swallowed in infancy; badly dressed food shortens life, and destroys more than all the other diseases put together. Not one in ten of the persons that go out as domestic servants knows her alphabet, and not one in twenty can read a book on cookery so as to understand it, but what they lack in reading they make up in impudence—sheer impudence; they are largely gifted with that commodity called brass, and will tell a lie and stick to it; they are artful and full of low cunning; and know that their mistresses are frightened, and at their mercy. Nearly every cook disputes the right of her mistress to enter her kitchen, and many a mistress has conceded the point for peace' sake, and tried to coax the creature into good humour, although she knew her to be a thief.

The class that go out as cooks not the proper class.

Children
poisoned.

Cooks, their dirt.

Their impudence.

The present system is a national calamity to both man and woman. England produces the best of food, and is supplied with luxuries from every clime, and in unthankfulness the whole is nearly destroyed. Is it to be wondered at that the thoughtful man prefers his club, the yachtman his vessel, the sportsman his country box, and the

The present system is a national calamity. Is it to be wondered that single men prefer their club, yacht, and country boxes?

The remedy.

idler to travel where his mind may lead him? What is the remedy for the calamity? The Legislature is as deeply concerned as any other body; there is an absolute want of fifty thousand Miss Nightingales, and half a million educated preparers of food fitted for the human stomach. All these might be provided, and above half a million of females raised to respectable occupations, without costing the country a farthing more than is now expended, which would be a blessing conferred on every class, who, for the last three generations, have degenerated in strength and health, and the calamity has extended itself even to our army.

The army.

"In the time of the greatest prince that ever ruled in England, the soldier could march from the Land's End to John o'Groat's without a death happening from fatigue." Now-a-days, a regiment cannot march a few miles without numbers of soldiers falling, and many dying of exhaustion.

The educational council.

It is not generally known that our Legislature, as early as the year 1834, set aside 20,000*l.* for the promotion of education, and that sum has annually increased until last year, when the sum actually voted for education for the year ending 31st of March, 1860, amounted to the enormous sum of 836,920*l.*

Where persons intended for cooks or nurses should be educated.

This is the institution at which our nurses and our preparers of food should be educated; an annual sum should be paid thereto by every lady keeping a cook, and none other should be employed but those producing a diploma from the establishment, which is

THE EDUCATION OFFICE,

Privy Council Office, Downing-street, S.W.

The following are the salaries of the officers of that institution :*

1 Vice-President . . . . .	£2000	The establishment of the educational council.
1 Secretary . . . . .	1500
2 Assistant-Secretaries from 700 l. , rising 50 l. a year to . . . . .	1000
7 Examiners 300 l. , rising 20 l. a year to . . . . .	600
2 Clerks, vacancies not filled in, from 100 l. to . . . . .	300
52 Assistant-Clerks from 100 l. , rising 5 l. after a certain time, 10 l. a year to . . . . .	300	How additional means for the education of persons intending to be cooks should be raised.
1 Private Secretary to Vice-President . . . . .	150
1 Advising Counsel . . . . .	300
1 Architect . . . . .	400
59 Inspectors and Assistant-Inspectors of schools of 200 l. , rising to . . . . .	600

As most probably there would be an increase of officers and persons qualified to lecture on the art of cookery, and as such an institution should be self-supporting, there might be levied upon every house rated to the poor at the value of 50*l.*, the sum of 1*l.* annually:

* All these officers claim a vested right in their appointments.

If rated at	£100	—	£2
„	150	—	3
„	200	—	4
„	250	—	5
„	300	—	6

And every house above that value 10*l*. This would create a sufficient fund, and would justly be levied on those that have neglected their duty and caused so much misery.

Exemption to the gentlewoman.

There should be no exemption except to the gentlewoman who should prove to the satisfaction of the inspector or tax-collector that she bonâ fide prepared or inspected the preparation of the food of the household.

Some people argue that the money granted by Parliament as at present is thrown away.

Some people argue that the money voted by Parliament for education is thrown away, that the teachers are overpaid and above their work, that it is monstrous that Euclid and algebra should be necessary acquirements for the teachers of little boys whose destiny is labour of the lowest order, or emigration.

The opinion of Sir Hum-phry Davy.

Sir Humphry Davy, the great self-taught philosopher, who departed this life 29th of May, 1829, said, speaking on education, "I am sorry to say I think the system carried too far in England. God forbid that any useful light should be extinguished! Let persons who wish for education receive it; but it appears to me that in the great cities in England, it is, as it were, forced upon the population; and that sciences, which the lower classes can only very superficially acquire, are presented to them, in consequence of which they often become idle and conceited, and above their usual laborious occupations. The unripe fruit of the tree of knowledge is, I believe, always bitter or sour; and scepticism and discontent—sickness of the mind—are often the results of devouring it.”

Before sanctioning another grant, it is the duty of Parliament to ascertain how many have had the benefit of the millions already granted, and their present condition in life; how many young women teachers have broken down under their severe training for teachers, losing their health, and going into consumption, and to what end this has answered, and then the country can judge if it has got its money's worth.

It is the duty of Parliament to inquire in what way and what benefit has arisen from the enormous sums already granted.

If there is to be a national school-education, it should be extended to the teaching of nurses and cooks, which is of greater importance than the teaching of the little boys who are to be labourers or emigrants, few of whom remain at school after they are of an age to earn a few shillings. When that time arrives, it is a well-known principle they turn their backs on schooling, and the few that remain time enough to learn to read and write, become the leaders of strikes and factious rabble, Chartists, and delegates, of which we give an example from the Leeds Intelligencer :

The nurses and cooks should receive the education which is of greater importance than the little boys who go out as labourers or emigrants.

From the Times, Nov. 25, 1861.

“The following is the copy of a letter which was delivered by one of the Leeds post-office letter-carriers to a respectable tradesman in this town. The writer doubtless thought he was addressing it to one of the secretaries of the Reform Conference, but he had not done so. It is needless to comment upon its contents, for they speak for themselves, and confirm the opinion, elsewhere expressed, that the conference was little else than a Chartist one under another name. We commend the epistle to the attention of all whom it may concern: ‘Barnsley, Nov. 18, 1861. Dear Sir,—In answer to your communication, our deputation to the Reform Conference will call upon you previous to the opening. We should require four beds. Our old and mutual friend, Frank Mirfield, will form one of the deputation. We intend to enjoy ourselves while in Leeds. We are all in favour of the six points of the Charter. I remain, yours, &c., PETER HOEY. P.S. Be sure and make the post-office order payable to me, at No. 1, Raywood-row, Barnsley. I have seen several of the Wakefield Chartists, but they decline attending unless the amount is made up to 25s. each.—P. H.’”

It is not necessary that the persons lecturing on cookery should absolutely be cooks.

A catechism of cookery might be formed* and learned by every girl as easily as the multiplication-table. Cleanliness should be the first rule, the errors of boiling should be known as spoiling, and roasting confiscation. Let these three errors be pointed out, and a few other simple rules be taught, and the supposed difficulties of cookery will vanish ; and what is now known and called as the art of a Ude or a Francatelli will come to the comprehension and practice of every female as easily as the fashions and adornments of trimmings and ribbons come to the mantua-maker.

A catechism of cookery might be made and learned by every girl.

* From Dr. Kitchener's book, called “The Cook's Oracle.”

The supposed difficulties would vanish.

There was a time when trade was despised as much as the art of cookery is in the present day, but "a change has come over the spirit of the dream." James Earl of Balcarras has his carts in the town of Liverpool the same as any other carter ; Frances Anne Marchioness of Londonderry has the wisdom to revel in the delight of being in trade, and numerous are the other nobles that follow the example ; and young honourables, instead of going into the army, are finding their way into the factories at Glasgow.

The upper 5000 taking to trade.

CHAPTER VII.

DINNER-PARTIES TO BE AVOIDED.

People that give dinner-parties should confine the attendance to their own household.

Those that hire mutes.

Dining-rooms small and hot, everything cold but sherry and sloe-juice.

THE people that give what idiots call dinner-parties always exceed that which they can command from their own establishment. Those people keep a debtor and creditor account of their dinners, and they pay them off in the cheapest possible manner. They have a large dinner one day, and the following they have a similar dinner-party, to lick up the scraps. They hire three or four waiters, dressed in black, who, in the morning, have been employed carrying the corpse, or pulling long faces at a funeral. The very look of these fellows takes away one's appetite, saying nothing of the heat of the dining-room, not larger than a horse-box, in which eighteen or twenty persons are crammed, where everything is cold except the stuff called sherry and the sloe-juice purchased at some advertising Jew wine-merchant's. Such dinners are a mockery, and ought to be avoided. There is plenty of talk, but there is no conversation.

There are other dinners to be shunned—viz. Other dinners to be avoided. where the dinner is half made-up at home and the remainder is sent in from a cheap second-rate pastrycook's, where show and side-dishes are the order, and where the man that looks after the garden is dressed up, or the man that looks after the horse is brought in, smelling of the stable, to help the footman or the little boy with the rows of buttons.

What is more disgusting than the every-day The every-day dinner. English dinners? The soups thick and tasting of allspice and the essence of dirty saucepans; the thick lumps of clay which they dignify by the name of oyster or lobster-patties, which require powerful spectacles to discover either the oyster or the lobster; cod's head and shoulders, badly cooked, surrounded with raw parsley, the oyster-sauce nothing more than bill-sticker's paste, with a very sparing quantity of oysters with their beards on; soles fried till they are black, or the colour of chocolate; the side dishes, at which every one shakes his head; the eternal vulgar logs of beef and mutton, badly cooked, with a slop of water from the pot in which the vegetables were boiled by way of gravy, and surrounded with raw garden-stuff as garnish; a pair of fowls, done to rags, covered with bill-sticker's paste, and garnished, as they call it, with a barrowful of raw parsley; followed by jellies made from the gelatine manufactured by the horse-knacker, and pastry not fit for the stomach of an ostrich.

The kind of people met at the every-day English dinners.

The great person that keeps the dinner waiting.

Sir Noodle, Knight.

A German baron.

The donor of a drinking fountain.

Deputation from the doctors and scavengers of Brighton

At these sort of dinners you are sure to meet great people. You are sure to meet some great person that has kept the party waiting for an hour, who announces his arrival by a thundering knock of half an hour's duration. You find his greatness is in his make-up—his shiny black sticking-plaster boots, his false hair, his false whiskers, his false everything. Most probably you may meet some noodle who has been knighted by mistake, or for services that nobody ever heard of, whilst governor of some uninhabited island, the Secretary for the Colonies thinking it the cheapest way of getting rid of him. He belongs to a club, which he is continually talking about, and sleeps in some street at the back of the Haymarket. And more than likely you may meet some German baron, from Saxe-something, who is invited because he was once at the Queen's concert, of which he never forgets to talk; and the hostess and her daughters think it so very grand, and connects them with the aristocracy. Probably you may meet some person who has put up a drinking-fountain, who, in his humility, has not forgotten to emblazon it with his name and address at full length. As certain as eggs are eggs, you meet one of the six hundred and fifty-six that congregate at Westminster; and lucky if you don't meet two of them, who, to show their importance, and that they belong to the Legislature, begin by talk of the House and the lobby, and then get up the usual cross fire: the one will say how he received a deputation from the doctors and scavengers of Brighton claiming vested rights to all the cesspools ; and the other will describe how Lord Palmerston held him by the button-hole, and told him that a strong mixture of sewage and sea-water was highly beneficial, and exemplified his argument by saying that maggots were always found in good cheese, that flies invariably hover over a muck-heap, and that accounted for the swarms of Israelites at Brighton and other watering-places. As to females, you are sure to meet some fourth or fifth-rate women, pictures of awkwardness and ugliness, who have been to Court, but who had no more right there than the animals they dignify by the name of cook, and, like the flies in amber, sets some people wondering how they got there. To a certainty, you meet stuck-up nobodies, that try to talk fine ; they use large words to express small ideas. On one occasion the author heard a lady say “ she could never depend on the integrity of her stomach.” These carrion, in general, live in obscure lodgings ; if they hear mention made of a mutton-chop, express an affected oblivious doubt of its meaning, and, in a patronising way, suppose that it is a mutton côtelette. The author was, on one occasion, sitting next an old beau of upwards of eighty, dressed juvenile, with a rose stuck in his bosom. The old fool asked the author’s opinion of a flirting, loquacious, over-dressed young woman, of about twenty-four. The author simply answered that he thought that she would sell herself for a settlement. It and seawater beneficial.

Sewage

Shown by the flies and Israelites at Brighton.

Ladies that have been to court.

Stuck-up people who try to talk fine.

December and May.

Talking women.

Their conversation.

The Opera and its vagrants.

Morning employment.

Stuck-up
women assuming titles to which they have no right.

turned out that the lady was the old fellow's wife, that she was penniless, and that the old fellow had made a settlement; but he no more required a wife than a pig requires a side-pocket. To a moral or immoral certainty, you meet a lot of women wishing you to think they belong to the blue-stocking tribe. They all talk at the same time, and mostly about the Opera, or the Italian vagrants with assumed names. These women, without understanding a word of the language, express, in ecstasies of delight, their great admiration of a foreign corruption singing a profane song in a profane opera—harlots joining in chorus, and nude actresses indecently dancing amongst the grave-stones. It is fashionable, and these creatures affect the fashions of Belgravia, and, like them, waste their mornings in loud knockings at the doors of those they hope to find from home.

The party may be adorned by some impudent, stuck-up women, who have had three or four husbands, the first being a penniless booby lord by courtesy, whose name they retain, although aware that they have no right to it. "What is gained by marriage is lost by marriage;" and they know that their last husband's name is the name by which they should be called.*

* A peeress by marriage loses her dignity by marrying a commoner, and after such marriage is not entitled to any privilege.—Co. Lit. 16; 6 Co. 53; Dyer, 79.

So that a Miss Dobbs, who only the other day became a duchess by her marriage with the late Duke of Manchester, is now only Mrs. Blackwood by her marriage with a Mr. Blackwood.

You may, probably, meet some brazen-faced women who have the assurance to go to Court, and sometimes present two or three vermin like themselves, who, if the Lord Chamberlain knew the character of either the one or the other, they most certainly would not be allowed to sniff the air of the palace.

Brazen
women who go to Court.

Avoid dining at a house where it is presided over by a female, who forgets that she has passed some forty summers since she was fifteen, and who puts on a juvenility of manner and dress, as if going to dance a Spanish fandango. Such a hostess thinks little but talks much; her egotism makes you feel as if you were covered with pins and needles. In such a house all is discomfort.

A hostess to avoid.

I once made a present of an extremely fine haunch of venison to the husband of such a lady. They lived in what the world calls good style, and if neighbourhood had anything to do with good eating, we might have expected a good dinner. The agreement with the husband was to have a party of four—viz. himself, a late distinguished Q.C., the Honourable Mr. —, and myself. The haunch and a small chicken, turbot with crab-sauce, was to be the bill of fare, to be washed down with good wine. The wife, in her gentility, thought that this dinner was not grand enough: the idea of a haunch of venison and a small turbot did not coincide with the great ideas of the woman who had forgotten her age, so she set to work to spoil our dinner, and most effectually she did it. She

The description of a very grand dinner.

Vulgar
dinners.

invited some eighteen persons—"the shortness of the invitation to be excused, as it was to partake of a haunch of venison that would be in prime order on the day named." Every one invited came; the dinner was put on the table at eight o'clock; and the very table must have felt the vulgarity of the load. There were two heavy thick soups, followed by a full-grown turbot, I should think measuring two feet across; at the other end of the table was half of a salmon, weighing at least twenty pounds, with lobster and anchovy sauces. There was also put on the table six silver side-dishes, containing—God and the cook only knew. Then there came the eternal boiled fowls and bill-sticker's paste. I forget what was at the other end of the table, but in the middle was a horse's tongue.* It was nine o'clock, if not past, when the haunch was brought in. I shall never forget its appearance; at first I thought that they had placed on the dish, by way of joke, the saddle belonging to some postboy, who had rode on it as many years as the lady of the mansion was old. The poor host tried to carve it, but to cut it was impossible. It was done, it was overdone, and was like cutting an old cable. What could be chopped or haggled off was sent round to the ladies, but they had all crammed.

* There is not a horse that dies in London, or within reach of it, that the tongue is not pickled and dried and sold as a Russian rarity.

I had not tasted any of the dinner, having determined to dine, as I was engaged to do, off venison. It is needless to state I could not eat a morsel. The would-be juvenile asked me if it was to my liking; I answered that it was overdone. She replied that, to her mind, it was done to a turn. I repeat, avoid vulgar dinners, where the tables groan under a load of vulgarity and badly cooked food. Such dinners bring on disease, and shorten life.

Never accept an invitation where you have a suspicion that the dinner is to be cooked by the woman that cleans the street-door steps. If the mistress (and there are thousands of them) of such a woman has the audacity to invite you, you may depend upon it that she is lower in intellect than the woman that cleans her steps.

Never accept an invitation where the woman that pretends to cook the dinner cleans the street-door steps.

Beware how you accept invitations to cockney villas with romantic names, or you may find yourself in a den the size of a rat-trap, in some out-of-the-way Botany Bay place, miles from your home on a wet night, and your stomach grumbling and reminding you that the dinner was bad, and the stuff you drank was not wine.

Refuse invites to cockney villas.

There are some hosts who are as great humbugs as their hostesses, who say that they cannot get good wine. If those impostors would only take the trouble to put their fists into the right pocket, and go to the right man and pay the right price, they would get the right wine.

The hosts that pretend they cannot get good wine.

Preference to be given to herrings and potatoes and bread-and-cheese
dinner.

If the impostor dinner-givers would, instead of their dirty feast, only give a red-herring and a well-boiled potato, a bit of good bread from Lemann's in Threadneedle-street, a bit of good cheese from Cadbury's in Bond-street, a drop of good stout from Reid's brewery at the corner of Tottenham-court-road, with a fresh-pulled onion, every guest would be contented, and go away satisfied that the feast had not driven a dozen nails into his coffin, and the host would be respected, more especially if he gave some good gin-punch, but the gin must not be bought at the public-house, but at Anderson's distillery in Holborn.

Impostor dinner-givers deal at cheap and inferior shops.

These impostor dinner-givers invariably deal at cheap-bread bakers' and other inferior shops. The bread they put on the table contains bone-dust, and a mixture of clay, alum, sulphurate of copper, and potatoes: as to the cruets-stand, never ask for it, the vinegar contains sulphuric acid, the pepper is composed of the dirt and sweepings of the floors of the pepper warehouses, ground rice, ground mustard-seed and linseed-meal; as to the cayenne, it is composed of red-lead, mustard-seed, brick-dust, salt, ground-rice, and deal sawdust.* These are not half of the poisons offered at these dinner-tables. Sometimes they bring out what you think is a foaming glass of Barclay and Perkins; it is no such thing, it is purchased at the first public-house.

* Report of the evidence on the adulteration of food, ordered to be printed July 26, 1856.

The publican invariably draws off one-third of a butt, and fills it up with water and the following mixture :

Coculus Indicus and beans—as a stupifier.

Quassia—as a bitter.

Coriander-seeds, capsicums, caraway-seeds, ginger, grains of paradise, and pounded oyster-shells.

This beautiful brew is set off with a fine head—not unlike a young widow's cap—which is produced by a mixture of green vitriol, alum, and salt.

In most places these impostor dinner-givers begin by calling on the Deity to sanctify the filth they place upon the table, and end by turning up the whites of their eyes, calling upon the Lord to make them truly thankful for the stuff they have received.

If you value your health, you will never accept an invite to any of these kind of parties ; you will thereby avoid swallowing a conglomeration of filth, together with the poisonous Cape which they call sherry ; sloe-juice, made in London, which they call port ; and champagne, manufactured on the banks of the Thames, with fine silver labels, at fifteen shillings per dozen, bottles included. Avoid such parties and such people, and you will save many a headache, while you may reckon every refusal as a dozen nails from your coffin.

CHAPTER VIII.

THE ART OF PROLONGING LIFE.

THE GENTLEWOMAN AND HER MÉNAGE.

The distinction between a gentlewoman and a modern lady.

THE first glance of her is like the preface of a beautiful book—she presents a world of things, of mind and elegance. The botanist crosses mountains and valleys before he meets with a rare flower, and when he does, it may be likened to the gentlewoman.

“She openeth her mouth with wisdom ; and in her tongue is the law of kindness.

“She looketh well to the ways of her household, and eateth not the bread of idleness.

“Her children arise up, and call her blessed ; her husband also, and he praiseth her.”

The gentlewoman exemplifies that her accomplishments are not incompatible with her duty ; she sitteth at the head of the table and distributes God's bounties to her admiring guests. In her presence small indeed appear all other women. She is conscious of the millions of wrongs that are perpetrated by deputy, and she disdains claiming exemption from the duties that were imposed upon Eve.

The gentlewoman is aware that the human frame is reminded of the loss which its vital mechanism has undergone by the call of hunger, and such loss must be replaced by good and sufficient food, or the vital flame will be enfeebled and ultimately extinguished. The compliance is the fulfilment of an agreeable duty, and ought to be a real enjoyment.

The call of hunger the compliance of an agreeable duty.

If ever you get introduced into a house where the lady of the mansion looks to the cuisine, you need not be under the apprehension of poison. Be sure to treat her as (she is) a superior being; and should you be so fortunate as to receive an invitation, put off any and every engagement, even by command of Majesty. You will find yourself amply repaid.

The lady that looks after the cuisine a superior being.

Her invitation not to be refused.

Neither refuse an invitation to dine on board a yacht. You are sure of a good dinner. In the little kitchens are composed the prettiest little dinners that can be conceived; and it is wonderful that so many women as have partaken of the hospitality of those places should not have tried to follow the example.

Invitation to dine on board yachts not to be refused.

Again, where are such breakfasts to be had as on board a yacht? Fish hot every morning for breakfast, and the remainder of the various little dishes of the preceding day re-cooked and prettily Breakfasts on board yachts very superior.

Not so the lady housewife's breakfasts.

put on the table, the very sight of them making you hungry. This is beneath the thought or dignity of an English lady, who thinks a cup of tea, badly made, and bread-and-butter, is sufficient breakfast, especially if enlivened by a hard-boiled egg, nearly cold.

The man who has a wine-cellar and looks after it is a man of sense.

If it should be your good lot to meet with a man who has a wine-cellar, and who looks after it himself, be assured that he is a man of sense, and ranks far above the every-day man. You may safely listen to his conversation, and you will understand it, although you may have drank four bottles of his wine.

Enjoyable
dinners.

How enjoyable is a dinner where all affectation is abandoned, where there is no competition in vanity, where the guests are all good temper and smiles, no smell of scents or filthy patchouli to disturb your digestion, where the convives give their attention to the dinner, knowing that each entrée should be eaten at the moment it is in its highest perfection. At such a dinner you never hear senseless cackle, but a calm, quiet interchange of sentiments; the guests are all attention to each other, and pass the plates according to convenience (without waiting a servant), and enlivening the entertainment by expressions of appreciation.

Good dinners promote the good looks of the females.

The French are thoroughly alive to the art of dinner-giving, and they say good eating is favourable to beauty, and keeps off the exterior appearance of old age. It gives brilliancy to the eyes, freshness to the skin, and stays the depression of the muscles which cause the wrinkles that are the enemies of beauty; and that it is certain that those females who know how to eat are comparatively ten years younger in appearance than those that know not the science; and that painters and sculptors are aware of the fact, for they never represent the half-starved, the bilious, or the pale, from the malady of badly-cooked food, their blotches, wrinkles, or decrepitude.

A dinner well chosen for a party of eight genial souls, four gentlewomen and four gentlemen, put on a snow-white table, and, to save the noise and trouble of servants brushing and disturbing the company, four knives and four forks to each guest; nothing else on the table, except the bill of fare, and a thick bit of bread to each guest, and the four glasses, and four wines necessary for such a party, every dish brought from the model kitchen and put on separately,* being timed to come on the table at the moment it is wanted, and eaten at the very moment it is in its highest perfection. Such a dinner is fit for the gods—it surpasses the

A party of eight.

* This is not a new fashion, the Romans had their different dishes served separately; it was the vanity of showing the plated side-dishes that brought in the punishment of the present fashion. Pepys, under date November 2, 1668, says: "To Mr. Povy's about a coach, but there I find my Lords Sandwich, Peterborough, and Hinchinbroke, Charles Harbord, and Silney Montagu; and there I was stopped, and dined mighty nobly at a good table, with one little dish at a time upon it, but mighty many."

high-vaunted dinners of either the Goldsmiths', Fishmongers', or Merchant Taylors'; in fact, it cannot be surpassed.

THE MODEL KITCHEN.

The gentlewoman has her model kitchen as near as can be contrived to the salle-à-manger, and in the space of a few square feet will produce, without any apparent effort, a dinner for a dozen persons. There is no hurry, no flurry, no smell, which usually emanates from the cooking, to which most people are accustomed. All that the ignorant cook allows to escape by evaporation is preserved. All is delicately clean, the stew-pans bright, and the porcelain saucepans as clean as teacups; the very cloths are washed at home (in soda only) to avoid contact with soap, or, what is worse, being washed in the suds through which the laundress has passed all the dirty linen until she comes to the snuffy handkerchiefs, and then she thinks the suds will do for the cooking towels.

To the mind accustomed to the expensive kitchen range, the destruction of tons upon tons of coals, its dirt, its soot, and its waste, it appears marvellous that a good dinner can be cooked to the moment it is wanted at the cost of a few pence.

Every house has a room which, if occupied by a medical man, would be turned into what would be called his surgery. Let that room be fitted up with a china sink, large enough to soak a ham, let water be laid on, and a tap to let it off. Let shelves be put up sufficient to hold a dozen china saucepans (Dresden*), from the size of the butter saucepan to the largest, which is the size to boil (simmer) an aitchbone of beef ; there will be wanted a shelf on the floor for the bright stew-pans.

---

There will also be required a glass case to lock up the necessary condiments, &c. &c. For these condiments, see Dr. Kitchener.

Employ Mr. T. Phillips, of Skinner-street, Snow-hill, to put up a stove.

Turn the thing that now you call by the misnomer of cook into the kitchen-maid of this place ; let her hands, her cap, and apron always be clean. Her duty will be to keep everything chemically clean, to wash the towels at home in soda, and to do as you may direct. She will, of course, have to cook her own and fellow-servants' victuals in her kitchen below ; and inform her she must cease to use the cooking towels as her pocket-handkerchief ; and if you find any long hairs or little animals, she must have her hair cropped if she is worth keeping. Ascertain if she is healthy in body ; her person ought to smell as sweet as a cow. If she has damp hands or a foul breath, or wears a seton, or has sore legs, get rid of her at once—or everything she touches will be tainted.

* Messrs. Powell, of the Whitefriars Glass Works, are agents to the manufacturers at Dresden.

The advantages of using gas for cooking purposes in preference to any other kind of fuel are so obvious as scarcely to require enumeration. A uniform and steady heat at any temperature can be maintained without any supervision throughout the whole process, and may be raised or lowered as required at any moment. The heat need only be applied when the meat is fully prepared for dressing, and may be removed immediately it is done, or, when necessary, turned down so as only to keep the meat hot while other dishes are being got ready. The operation being carried on in a closed chamber, the meat is heated all over alike, and is found to be much better dressed than by either roasting or baking. There is no waste heat, and the temperature of the room is but very slightly increased, so that large operations may be carried on without any inconvenience to the persons employed. In stewing, especially, where the heat is required to be maintained within the boiling point for a long time, it answers to perfection.

Several important experiments were made at Greenwich Hospital, by the late M. Soyer, upon apparatus constructed at that establishment, as to the comparative results of cooking by gas and by coal, when it was definitely settled that, besides being more cleanly, economical, and convenient, there was a saving in weight of 18 lbs. against 34 lbs. on 184 lbs. of meat in favour of gas.

IMPORTANCE OF CLEANLINESS.

Impress upon your servant its importance ; let him or her know that the smallest particle of dirt changes the character of a dish, and that the very touch of an unhealthy person will taint any joint of meat. Make him or her a present of a nail-brush, and tell him or her you will notice whether he or she uses it.

Never admit a suspected person into your kitchen. There is an electricity in the human body which communicates with all bodies, and those persons that scent themselves or wear that disgusting stuff called patchouli, are especially to be excluded.

DISADVANTAGES OF A MODEL KITCHEN.

The disadvantages of the model kitchen are, that the cookery is so pure that the very eating creates an appetite. You are continually hungry ; the dinners are in such strong contrast that they give you a horror of the impostor dinners. You shrink at the thought—the very idea—of the usual sea-side trip, with all the dirt of sea-side lodging-houses, and greasy, dirty cookery. It produces a complete revolution in the family directly your daughters learn that a sweet or savoury omelette or other like delicacies are so easily made, and in less time than you can speak to the woman called cook, their delight is ungovernable, they are continually in the kitchen. The piano, globes, Latin, and all other rubbish of the kind—Rotten-row and botanical fêtes—all, all are abandoned.

The disadvantages are more than counterbalanced by the advantages. It teaches frugality and delight to be enabled to make something out of what your daughters have thought nothing, and the infinite variety surprises and surpasses their imagination. In a month they learn how to place a good and economical dinner on the table; in a twelvemonth they become the acme of perfection; they declare that the art of cookery is not half as difficult as cookery books lead you to suppose; and the changes are easy and exhaustless. If you can attain perfection in one or two dishes, you can do what you please in the art. Their health is improved, they are no longer yellow or cadaverous with eating dirty and badly dressed food, they find their minds enlarged, and they are raised to an honourable position, and resolve “to be sought, and not unsought be won,” and instead of studying crochet or any other fancy sham of industry, they read—

“Dr. Kitchener’s Cook’s Oracle.”

“Le Cuisinier Royal,” par Viart.

“Francatelli’s Modern Cook.”

“Miss Acton’s Modern Cookery.”

When they appear in society, they are looked upon as somebody. Such women are soon found out; they have no occasion to ogle for husbands, or take indirect steps to obtain them. Men seek the girls that know something towards making home happy, knowing that the happiness of home depends upon the management and tact of the wife, which are the real charms and pleasures of a home.

THE CHOOSING A DINNER.

Remember that the year is divided into four seasons, and that the best dinner is that which is composed of everything in season; the females never forget to change their dress according to the different months, although they stick to the everlasting monotony of thick soups and cod’s-head and shoulders.

In your choice of a dinner, do not forget that there should be no attempt at flourish; the dinner should be softened down as like as possible to the enjoyable entertainment of a yachtman; to see such a dinner, it would be worth the time of any Amphitryon going to the Hôtel de Flan-dres at Brussels, where he would see an admi-nable dinner; every dish brought on separately, and to resemble which it should not exceed six to eight dishes; such a variety, if well chosen and well cooked, will give greater satisfaction than a badly-cooked dinner of a hundred removes, more especially if each dish be timed to be brought separately on table at the moment it is cooked, which is the time it is in the highest perfection. For a party of eight or ten persons, there should be:

How to choose a dinner.

POTAGE.

To choose, see pages 62, 63, and 64.

FISH.

To choose, see pages 69 to 76.

MEATS.

To choose, see pages 83 to 90.

POULTRY

and

GAME.

To choose, see pages 77 to 83.

SWEETS.

See page 91.

VEGETABLES.

See page 95.

EACH DISH SHOULD BE BROUGHT IN SEPARATELY.

As all the dishes cannot be partaken of at the same time, let them be brought in one at a time. You will save annoyance to the guests, and two servants will suffice, and the dinner will be well served.

As to the laying of the table, see antè, page 49; but it is a very comfortable method to have the servants in the room only when they are rung for; in such case, each guest will pass the plate to his neighbour.

NEVER WAIT DINNER.

Have it up the moment it is ready; if a male guest should not arrive in time he is not worth waiting for; if a female, it will teach her better manners.

HELPING THE GUESTS.

Do not imitate the would-be fine ladies who think they are doing gentility when they pull wry faces, asking if you will have a leg or wing, forgetting that a fowl has only two, and if all chose the same she could not supply them; and be sure you do not imitate her in waiting for the gravedigger, the mute, or the little boy to hand you your plate, although you are sitting next her. Help quickly, and pass on the plate.

WINE.

Let every guest help himself and challenge his neighbour to wine; it begets good fellowship, and avoids the annoyance of awkward servants slopping the wine into your glass. People forget that the good old fashion was abandoned on the Queen coming to the throne, who, as a girl, could not challenge her guests to take wine; and thus it became the fashion to imitate her Majesty in that which to her was a matter of necessity.

THE GUESTS.

Selection of guests.

The selection of the guests should not be forgotten. No Amphitryon neglects it; choose them for their good qualities, let them be amiable and sociable; do not invite those whose vanity would usurp the talk; such people are empty and disagreeable, and no more to be admired than the wasp's-bite disposition of some other people: above all, never invite a garrulous woman; she will detain her soup-plate on the table talking nonsense until the fish is entirely spoiled.

There is a class of woman that should be excluded from every dinner. I mean the woman that takes a breakfast, and afterwards consume a couple of mutton chops, or an omelette or sweet-bread, at her luncheon, and finishes at Gunter's, or some other pastrycook's. Such women never do credit to any dinner. A French author describes her under the head "Des difficiles," and gives the following conversation:

"Madame, vous offrirai-je du salmis?"

"Je ne mange jamais de ragoûts."

"Accepterez-vous de ce vol-au-vent de laitances?"

"Je n'aime pas le poisson."

"Une tranche de chevreuil?"

"Le gibier m'incommode."

“ Que pourrai-je donc vous servir ? ”

“ Je ne sais. J’attendrai. Je vais voir. ”

“ Oh, allez au diable, et n’approchez jamais de ma salle-à-manger ! ”

A CONTINENTAL ENTERTAINMENT TO TWELVE HUNDRED PERSONS.

That our English public dinners are little better than rabid entertainments is generally admitted, and will bear no comparison with an entertainment on the Continent. On the 18th of August, 1861, there was an Artistic Congress at Antwerp, followed by a dinner :

The difference between a foreign and an English entertainment.

“ The guests, amounting to upwards of twelve hundred persons, took their places without the slightest confusion or crowding ; and after the lapse of less than half an hour, the repast—a hot one and really hot—was served with a promptness and precision which was perfectly marvellous ; plates, &c., changed, and each dish handed round in its order, without any of that roaring and scrambling, and ‘ Yes, sir ! ’ ‘ Coming, sir ! ’ which are uniformly the undignified characteristics of a so-called public dinner to some eighty or a hundred guests at an English dinner. All honour be given to the two houses of M. Allard, restaurant of Brussels, and Messrs. Lambo, frères et sœur, of Antwerp, who jointly provided this magnificent banquet.

" The following is the menu :

" Solennités Artistiques, 18th August, 1861.

" Potage pâte d'Italie.

" Turbot, sauce aux câpres.

" Roast-beef à la paysanne.

" Poularde au curry.

" Jambon et haricots verts.

" Pâte Bretonne.

" Ortolans.

" Homards, sauce tartare.

" Pudding, fromage, fruits.

" Dessert.

" Vins : St. Julien, 1848.

" Château Margaux, 1848.

" Champagne : Moët et Chandon."

From the Illustrated News, August 24, 1861.

AS A SPECIMEN OF A GOOD CLUB DINNER, the following is a copy of the bill of fare of a dinner given at the Reform Club, May 20, 1861 :

TWO POTAGES.

Printannier à la Colbert.      Potage à la Reine.

TWO RELEVÉS.

Saumon à la Régence, sauce Gênoise.

Turbot, sauce Hollandaise et sauce homard.

TWO FLANCS.

Selle d'Agneau à la Dauphine.

Filet de bœuf Jardinière.

FOUR ENTRÉES.

Filets de volaille à la Villeroy.
Ris de veau à la St. Cloud.
Timbale de foie gras à la Périgueux.
Aspic de filets de soles en belle vue.

PIECE DE MILIEU.

Hermitage de Sion (Suisse).

TWO ROTS.

Les cailles de vigne, bread sauce.
Cannetons nouveaux au cresson.
Punch à la Romaine.

FOUR ENTREMETS.

Asperges en branches, sauce au beurre.
Petits pois à l'Anglaise.
Franco-Belge glacé.
Gelée Californienne à l'eau-de-vie de Dantzig.
Plovers' eggs.

DESSERTS.

English pines, hot-house grapes, strawberries, lady apples, leiches.

SOUPS.

Thick soups are not to be tolerated; it is very well to give those kind of soups to cricketers, boat rowers, and the like, but it is not allowable to choke your guests off their dinner. If soup be desirable, let it be as the French have it—a potage; and if it should happen that early in the season you should indulge in green peas or asparagus, do as the French do—boil them not in too much water, and only a little salt; save the water in which they have been boiled, and the following day you may add what has been left of the vegetable, and any little jelly or gravy you may have in the larder, which, with a little pepper, will make a delicious potage. The French reckon one hundred and one potages (vide “Le Cuisinier Royal,” par Viart), which is the best and most economical of all the cookery books ever published, and if you have a garden, nearly every one of the hundred and one may be put on the table at the cost of a few farthings.

A turbot dressed as you would cook a turtle, will make a soup which is preferred by many to turtle soup.

POTAGES, OR SOUPS.

Julienne. How to make, see next page.

Vegetable.

Green peas.

Carrot.

Asparagus.

Vermicelli.

Giblet.

The soup on the next page, may be turned into any of these soups by adding the vegetables required.

Turtle (from the Ship and Turtle, Leadenhall-street).

STEWES.

Mutton broth and chops for eight persons.

See page 68.

Hotch-potch for eight persons.

Irish stew for eight persons.

Hot-pot for eight persons. See page 66.

Most of the party will dine. See page 66.

Haricot mutton.

Stewed beef and vegetables.

Curry. See page 67.

Leg of mutton braised.

Stewed mutton cutlets. See page 67.

JULIENNE SOUP

Is made of carrots, turnips, leeks, onions, celery, lettuce, sorrel, chervil, parsnips, haricots, and bruised peas, chopped up together.

Put two ounces of butter into a saucepan; when it begins to melt, add a spoonful of flour, and an onion chopped very fine; stir together until it becomes quite red. You then put in the vegetables: place the saucepan on your stove and let them simmer for an hour, stirring them very often to prevent burning, and when they become lightly brown, put in three quarts of veal broth; let it boil, and skim, afterwards add a bouquet of thyme, bay-leaves, garlic, and parsley tied up together, and let them remain. An hour before serving, add a purée of peas, half a spoonful of brown sugar, a little salt, and a pinch of pepper. Do not put in the stalks of the carrots, and use only the white part of the leeks, but plenty.

A VERY OLD CHESHIRE RECEIPT, VIZ. OF THE SIXTEENTH CENTURY, FOR A GOOD AND INEXPENSIVE SOUP.

Put a hock of beef into a gallon of cold water, simmer it gently for six hours, taking care that it is well skimmed.

Put in some thyme, sweet margery, and celery, all tied in a bunch, as also a couple of onions cut fine.

Skim off all fat, and season with pepper and salt, and a little catchup.

OBSERVE—

Omitting the above seasoning. This soup may be turned into all kinds of soup, by adding the vegetables to give the flavour required.

If you wish a white soup, order a knuckle of veal and calf's foot, and proceed as above.

HOTCH-POTCH (for eight persons).

This is a dish greatly liked, but is only to be obtained when peas are to be got, viz. May, June, and July.

Take three pounds of the best ribs of neck of mutton, cut into chops, with as little fat as possible.

One and a half breakfast-cupfuls of grated carrots.

Three ditto of carrots.

Three ditto of turnips.

Twelve young onions.

The white part of two stock lettuces.

Two cupfuls of green peas.

To be cut into small pieces.

Two table-spoons of flour.

All these are to be put on the fire with two quarts of water, to simmer for two hours, the fat to be occasionally skimmed off, and, half an hour before serving, add a cupful of peas, also pepper and salt according to taste; if it should be too thick it may be thinned with a little hot water. Serve in a tureen.

N.B. I have seen this put on the table in Scotland with grouse soup, when every person refused the latter, but greedily partook of this.

IRISH STEW (for six or eight persons).

Irish stew.

From a fine neck of mutton cut off all the best chops, and trim as much of the fat as is necessary, and put them away; soak the remaining part of the neck in cold water, and wash clean; put the whole into a saucepan, with as little water as will just cover it, and let it simmer gently for three or four hours; strain it into a basin, and when cold, skim off the fat. Take a pint of this stock, put it into a stewpan with five or six onions, lay the chops which you had put by over them, put in a dozen and a half of peeled potatoes, and pepper and salt according to taste, and let the whole simmer gently for two hours; if more potatoes are required, not to be done so much, put them in half an hour before serving. It is an improvement to put in a little mushroom catchup, or a couple dozen oysters.

Hot-pot.

HOT-POT (for eight persons),

A Lancashire dish, is much liked; so much so, that every one at table always partakes of it, and most persons make their dinner of it.

This dish must be made in a fireproof pan, resembling in shape a turtle-mug or cheese-pan. Cut three pounds of rump-steak into square pieces, cut eight or ten potatoes in quarters, some whole small onions, and mushrooms if in season, all well-seasoned with cayenne black pepper and salt, together with half a dozen kidneys; place all in layers one on the other, pour over them three or four table-spoonfuls of mushroom catchup, and put six or eight dozen oysters at the top, cover it with a crust, and bake for two hours.

A few larks or snipes are a great addition to the above.

STEWED MUTTON CUTLETS.

Stewed
mutton
chops.

Take the eight best chops of the fore-loin, trim them neatly of the fat, partly broil them on each side, and put them to drain off the fat. Take a Spanish onion, cut it up small, put it into a stewpan with two ounces of butter, a little cayenne and salt to taste; stew gently until a complete pulp; half an hour before you want it put in the broiled chops, and stew gently. On dishing up, add a tea-spoonful of garlic vinegar at the bottom of the dish.

CURRY.

Curry.

Cut up a large Spanish onion into very small pieces, put into the stewpan two ounces of butter, and stew until a complete pulp, when put in your meat; if you can obtain a few French or Flemish carrots, cut them up small, and put also into your stewpan. It is silly to suppose that any kind of meat will do for a curry; it is only the impostor dinner-giver that thinks so; a rabbit should not be used, it is in some seasons as strong in smell as a cat. The white meats are the best—viz. chickens, pork, breast of veal, and the like. It is a very great mistake to boil the meat with the curry-powder; the ingredients are extremely volatile, and fly off. You never hear of boiled tea or coffee for that very reason ; therefore, ten minutes before the curry be wanted, pour out of the stewpan into a basin as much of the gravy as you conveniently can get, add a couple of table-spoonfuls of curry-powder, and a table-spoonful of arrowroot, well mix, pour the same back again by the side of the stewpan, so that it may get underneath the meat, and let it simmer until it just comes to bubble ; but if you let it boil, the aroma of the curry-powder will be gone ; add the squeeze of half a lemon, and serve.

A table-spoonful of chutney is not a bad addition.

Curry-powder. See page 100.

Mutton
broth.

MUTTON BROTH.

The late Lord Abinger was very fond of this, and when in company always had it served at dinner with a chop in each soup plate.

From a fine neck of mutton cut off and trim eight of the best chops, soak the remaining part for half an hour in fresh cold water, then put the neck and trimmings into three quarts of cold water with a little salt ; when the water boils skim it, and add half a pound of Scotch barley, one onion, four carrots, four turnips, cut into small pieces the size of dice, skim the broth every quarter of an hour, and let simmer four hours. Take out the neck and the trimmings, put in a little pepper and the eight chops, with a small bunch of parsley and thyme, and simmer gently till served.

FISH.

Always choose the freshest of the day, never be persuaded into buying that which is stale, or has been in the ice-well; such fish is not worth the trouble of cooking, and frequently brings on dysentery.

MELTED BUTTER (Dutch fashion).

Melted butter.

Roll as much fresh butter as required in arrow-root, to give it a thickness and appearance of cream, then melt it in a Dresden pipkin or butter saucepan; well beat up the yolk of one, two, or three eggs with a small quantity of water; stir the yolk, or yolks, and water carefully into the butter, to prevent the egg setting; warm it to a simmer, add a little pepper and salt.

By adding anchovy, mushroom, capers, or parsley, or any other flavour to this mixture, you will have any sauce you may require: but if parsley, or capers and butter is required, simmer the parsley or capers in the small quantity of water directed to be stirred into the yolk.

May be turned into all kinds of sauces.

A LIST OF FISH TO CHOOSE FROM.

Fish to choose.

Salmon, boiled.—Anchovy sauce.

Shrimp sauce.

Fried slices, with mayonnaise sauce.

See page 74.

Matelote. See page 74.

Soles, fried.—Shrimp sauce.

Boiled.—Mushroom sauce.

Filleted. See page 71.

Filleted. See page 73.

Turbot, boiled.—Lobster or oyster sauce.

See also page 73.

Brill.—Same as turbot.

Cod, boiled.—Oyster or anchovy sauce.

Fried slices.—Ditto, ditto.

Salt.—With egg sauce.

Mullet.—See page 76.

Haddock.—Oyster or mushroom.

Mackerel, boiled.—Sweet herbs. Sauce, maître d'hôtel.

Whiting, boiled.—Mushroom sauce.

Fried.—Ditto.

Eels, stewed.

Boiled.—Sauce, maître d'hôtel.

Fried.

John Dory, boiled.—Sauce, oyster or mushroom.

Skate.—Anchovy sauce.

Herrings, broiled.—Onions fried, and served on a separate dish.

Smelts, fried.—Melted butter.

Flounders, fried.

Water souchet.

Oysters, fried.—See page 75.

Sauce.—See page 75.

Mussel sauce.—See page 76.

Soles may nearly always be got fresh; three filleted will be twelve pieces, and enough for eight persons. Have the heads and bones sent home; stew them in half a pint of water with some parsley, pepper, and salt; you will have a thick jelly, which, added to any other broth, will form a nice potage for the following day, or you may make a souchet with some small flounders, eels, or soles; if you do so, of course you will stew in this jelly the heads and fins of whatever fish you may choose for the purpose, which, with some brown bread and butter, will make a pretty dish, equal to anything you can get at Blackwall.

Soles
stewed.

The twelve fillets are to be prepared as follows, and if served three hundred and sixty-five times in a year, you will have the pleasure of seeing them eaten by every guest :

Chop two shallots and three sprigs of parsley very fine, spread them over the bottom of your shallow copper côtelette-pan, double each fillet of sole and lay the pointed ends in the centre of the pan, and it will form something like a star; throw over a glass of sherry, and stew two and a half minutes on your gas stove or hot plate; turn the twelve pieces, have ready and pour into the centre of the pan the following mixture :

How to be placed in côtelettepan.

soles
filleted
stewed.

Two tea-spoonfuls of anchovy sauce.

Three ditto of mushroom catchup.

One ditto of sugar.

One ditto of lemon juice.

A quarter ditto of cayenne.

When the fish comes to boil they are done, which will be in two minutes and a half.

To eat this dish to perfection it should be served smoking in the pan as cooked.

Sole au gratin.

SOLE AU GRATIN.

This is a favourite dish, but as only one sole can be cooked at a time, the guests should not exceed four, unless it should be a very large one. The French have an oblong metal dish, mostly in silver, for the purpose, so that it may be served in the dish in which it is cooked.

Grease the bottom of the dish with butter to prevent it sticking, chop some parsley and a shallot, spread lightly, add some salt and pepper, a little wine or brandy, lay the sole upon it, spread over the same things on the top of the sole, and some lumps of butter with some button mushrooms, or a table spoonful of catchup, and a little gravy that you may have by you; rasp over some bread crumbs, and cook it gently in the oven; it will be done in about half an hour; if a thick fish, it will take longer.

A turbot cooked in the same way is easier and liked better than boiling; but the articles above must be increased according to size of the fish. It will take an hour or more cooking according to its size. Make a sauce to pour over it on going to table, as follows :

A little white sauce.

Two table-spoonfuls of anchovy.

Two ditto of mushrooms.

Six table-spoonfuls of cream.

One tea-spoonful of sugar.

A little cayenne.

Thicken with arrowroot.

The last thing, add two dozen oysters without their beards; do not let them come to the boil; add the juice of a lemon, and serve.

SOLE A LA MAITRE D'HOTEL.

Sole à maitre d'hôtel.

This is a pretty change, and much liked. Have two or three soles filleted, stew the heads and bones in about half a pint of water, place the fillets of the soles as before directed in a flat côtelette-pan, in about a wine-glass of this water, simmer two and a half minutes each side, the remainder of the water turn into sauce by putting two ounces of butter, a little cayenne and salt, and chopped parsley, thickening with arrowroot; add a tea-spoonful of eschallot vinegar, or the squeeze of half a lemon, pour over, and serve.

SALMON.

Fried slices and served hot with the mayonnaise. It is a very nice dish. See page 94.

MATELOTE OF SALMON.

Take two or three slices of salmon, lay them in a small kettle with a strainer, stew them very gently in a quart of veal gravy, a gill of Harvey's sauce, for twenty minutes; lift out the strainer with the fish, pour off the gravy into a stewpan, return the strainer with the fish to keep warm, thicken the gravy with arrowroot, season it with pepper and salt, add a quarter of a pint of sherry, a gill of capers, a dozen of pickled gherkins cut in slices; pour the whole back again over the salmon. Let them simmer five minutes, and serve, to be eaten without delay.

OYSTERS

should be obtained direct from their bed. Nothing can be worse than stale oysters; and it is a strange fact that there is not a shop between Cheap-side and Hyde Park where you can depend upon getting an oyster fresh from Billingsgate; all the shops keep them more or less fresh. A penny-post letter the previous evening to Pym of the Poultry, will ensure your having on the following morning, per Parcel Delivery Company, as many as you may order.

OYSTER SAUCE.

Sauce.

Place a pint basin before you on the table in your parlour or model kitchen ; open the oyster from the liquor into a Dresden porcelain saucepan, cut off the fat part of the oyster whilst on the shell into the basin, then cut off the beard and horny substance into the saucepan into which you drained the liquor, and so proceed until you have opened six or eight dozen ; put away the basin with the oysters until wanted.

Place the saucepan with the beards and liquor on the stove to simmer for a quarter of an hour, strain off the liquor, and let it stand until it has settled, then strain it into the porcelain saucepan you intend to make the sauce in ; put in a quarter to half a pound of sweet fresh butter, a little cayenne pepper, and thicken with arrowroot ; keep it warm, and just before you want to serve up the sauce, pour in the oysters to plump, but do not let them come to the boil ; if it be liked, you can squeeze in half a lemon.

FRIED OYSTERS.

Fried.

Put a lump of butter into a stewpan, and as much flour as the butter will bind ; add the liquor of the oysters and some cream, and let it simmer until it becomes a substance like custard, when the butter will return like oil, which skim off and put in the oysters (best natives), bearded; add a little more cream and cayenne to taste.

Have some bread crumbs ready nicely browned, with a little butter, salt, and pepper; put the fried oysters into them the very last thing, or the crumbs will get moist; to be eaten to perfection should be eaten without delay.

RED MULLET.

This is not only a scarce fish, but seldom to be obtained quite fresh. Whenever they are of a bright pink colour, with bright eyes, buy them; you will never get them what some people call cheap. The scales, gills, and the sand-bag, as the fishmongers call it, is all that is to be taken from them; if they are properly cooked they are better eaten in their own sauce, which is as follows:

Put about two ounces of butter at the bottom of the dish, melt it, put some cayenne pepper and a dessert-spoonful of anchovy sauce; lay the fish in it, then cover the fish with small bits of butter, put them into the oven, and in half an hour they will be done, which you may know from the colour of their eyes. They will require no other sauce. The fish should be served in the dish in which they were cooked.

MUSSEL SAUCE.

Like the oyster, the mussel should be quite fresh. Send to Billingsgate for four quarts of fresh large mussels, have them washed and brushed clean, put them into a pan with some salt and water and fine oatmeal for a day or so, and they will fatten and cleanse themselves; when wanted, put them into a saucepan and on the fire, and when they open pour them into a pan, pick them one by one, take out the small piece of weed in each fish and put them aside; let the liquor settle, strain off as much as you want, put in a quarter of a pound of butter with a little pepper, and thicken with arrowroot, and just before you want it, put in the mussels to warm, but not to boil. This is a very nice sauce, and may be used wherever oyster sauce is required, or eaten with sippets of toasted bread.

POULTRY AND GAME.

Make it a rule to deal with a first-rate poulterer; it is better to pay a little more than to buy cheap poultry, which are lean and generally the produce of robbery. There is a first-rate and the largest poulterer in England in Leadenhall-market, Mr. Henry D. Brooke; where you will not only have the pick of nearly the whole of the poultry sent to London, but you will get it at the market price; a penny-post letter the evening before you want either poultry or game will secure what you want. For cold chickens and poultry use salad, page 93, or mayonnaise, page 94. To choose.

LIST OF GAME AND POULTRY.

January and February.—Pheasants, partridges, hares, wild-ducks, pin-tail, widgeon, teal, wood-cocks, snipes, golden plover, larks (roast and boned), capercaillie, and ptarmigan. Turkeys boil, capons roast, poulards boil, fowls roast, chickens boil.

March and April.—Goslings, ducklings, spring chickens (boil), poulards and capons, pea-fowls, and guinea-fowls.

May and June.—Ortelans, quails, turkey poult, spring fowls (roast and boil), poulards, goslings and ducklings, plovers' eggs.

July and August.—Spring fowls, geese and ducks, grouse, leverets, turkey poult.

September and October.—Partridges, leverets, and grouse, black game, pheasants, capons, poulards, fowls, larks.

November and December.—Large turkeys (roast and boil), capons, poulards, fowls (boil), game, pheasants.

TWO CHICKENS FOR EIGHT PERSONS.

Two chickens.

Abandon the boil-fowl fashion, and order a pair of fowls to be sent without being trussed, and let the heads and necks be sent with them. Cut up one of the fowls into pieces, the leg and thigh into two pieces, each wing into two pieces, the back into three pieces, and the breast into two pieces, which, with the merry-thought, will be fourteen Chickens.

pieces.

Take a Spanish onion,* cut it up small, put it into a stewpan with two ounces of butter, and a little cayenne and salt; let it stew gently for about an hour, until it is in a complete pulp; half an hour before you want it put in the fourteen pieces of chicken, let them stew half an hour, and when done, put into your silver dish a tea-spoonful of Spanish or French garlic vinegar, or, if that is not liked, the squeeze of half a lemon, and you will never again want to taste insipid boiled fowl. Mind, it requires no water; the fowl will be done in its own gravy.

Cut the other fowl the same way, viz. fourteen pieces.

Let the heads and necks be picked and scalded, Chicken and mushrooms. stew them in half a pint of water, and when all the goodness is extracted strain off the liquor, put it into stewpan with a pint of button mushrooms, a little pepper and salt, and put in the fourteen pieces of fowl, stew them until done, about half an hour, thicken with a little arrowroot; when you dish them up, put into your silver dish a table-spoonful of mushroom catchup. These two fowls will be a variety, and requires only the effort of serving, and will be enough for eight or ten persons, and each convive will want to taste each dish.

* When not to be got, any other onion may be substituted.

Pigeons, when in season, cooked in the same manner, are equally good, and make a change—such a change that those who taste never forget it. Grouse and partridges treated the same way are better than roasted.

A young turkey poult dressed in the same way is a very inviting dish.

PHEASANT.

Pheasant
stewed.

A pheasant cut up as above and stewed in two ounces of butter, the oyster liquor of a couple of dozen oysters, with cayenne and salt, thickened with a spoonful of arrowroot, the oysters thrown in just before serving merely to plump them, is a very nice dish, and much better than roasted.

Roast fowl, chickens, partridges, grouse, and pheasants, are twice the size and better if stuffed with two ounces of butter, salt, and cayenne to taste, and as many mushrooms as you can put in; baste well, and set a toast under, and when done, serve on the toast.

Pheasant
stuffed with wood-cocks.

The French say: "To the uninitiated this bird is as a sealed book; eaten after it has been killed but three days it is insipid and bad, neither so delicate as a pullet, nor so odoriferous as quail. Cooked at the right moment, the flesh is tender and the flavour sublime, partaking equally the qualities of poultry and game. The moment so necessary to be known and seized on, is when decomposition is about to take place. A trifling odour and a change in the colour of the breast are manifested, and great care must be taken not to pluck the bird till it is to be larded and cooked, as the contact of the air will completely neutralise the aroma, consisting of a subtle oil, to which hydrogen is fatal. The bird being larded, the first thing to do is to stuff it, which is effected in the following manner : Provide two woodcocks, bone and divide them into two portions, the one being the flesh, and the other trail, brains, and livers. You then take the flesh and make a forcemeat by chopping it up with some beef-marrow cooked by steam, a little rasped bacon, pepper, salt, fine herbs, and so much of the best truffles as will, with the above, quite fill the interior of the pheasant. You must take care to secure this forcemeat in such a manner that it shall not escape, which is sometimes sufficiently difficult if the bird is in an advanced state; however, it is possible to do so in divers ways, one of which is by fitting a crust of bread and attaching it with a bit of ribbon. Take a slice of bread one-third of an inch thick and two inches wider on each side than the bird when laid on it; then take the livers, brains, and the trail of the woodcocks, pound them up with two large truffles, an anchovy, a little rasped bacon, and as much of the finest fresh butter as may seem necessary. Spread, then, this paste on the toast equally, and let the pheasant, prepared as above, be roasted over it in such a manner as that the toast may be saturated with the juices that drop during the operation of roasting. When that is done, serve the pheasant gracefully laid on its bed (the toast); garnish with Seville orange, and be tranquil as to the result."—Les Classiques de la Table, p. 129.

Poultry.
Made dishes.

POULTRY.—(Made dishes.)

Fricasseed fowl.	Scollop of poultry.
Capon with rice.	Poultry salad.
„ plain.	Mayonnaise of poultry.
Fowl stewed à la Ma-	Duck with olives.
renge.	„ with peas.
Fowl with tarragon.	Stewed pigeons.
Hashed fowl.	„ with peas.
White fricassee of poultry.

GAME.

Partridges.	Wild-duck.
„ hashed.	„ hashed.
Larks.	Plover.
Thrush.	Ragoût of hare.
Teal.	Fricasseed rabbit.
Woodcock.	Filet of chevreuil.
„ hashed.	Vol-au-vent financière.

Vol-au-vent of ox-palate. Vol-au-vent of brains.
 „ with vege- „ of turbot.
 tables.

LEGS OF TURKEY.

Spread small slices of bacon at the bottom of a closely-covered stewpan, spread a chopped eschallot and a little pepper and salt thereon, together with a quarter of a pound of nicely-prepared truffles in slices, and put in the legs, and gently stew until done.

BEEF.

MUTTON OR LAMB.

Beef, &c., to choose.

Sirloin.

Haunch.

Ribs rolled.

Saddle.

Rump.

Leg.

Round.

Loin.

Aitchbone.

Neck.

Brisket.

Shoulder.

Rump-steaks :

Chops—sweet herbs.

To be cut when the butcher comes to the part weighing three-quarters to a pound weight. For cooking, see page 90.

Lamb's fry—ditto.

Lamb's head—ditto.

Accompaniments. — Oyster sauce, mushrooms stewed, roast Spanish onions.

VEAL.	PORK.
Loin.	Leg.
Breast.	Loin.
Neck.	Neck.
Knuckle.	Chops.
Fillet.	Tomato sauce.
Cutlets.	Accompaniments for
Calf's head.	cold joints :
Liver and bacon.	See salad, pages
	93 and 94.
Liver and sliced sweet-	Beetroot.
bread and bacon.	Mayonnaise.
	Tomato sauce.

Made dishes to choose.

BEEF.—(Made dishes.)

Beef, plain.	Sirloin braisé.
„ with sharp sauce.	Plain beef-steak.
„ with tomato sauce.	Beef-steak with potatoes.
„ with cabbage.	„ with anchovy butter.
„ with sourkrout.	„ with cresses.
„ with olives.	Fillet of beef stewed in
„ à la mode.	gravy.
„ provincial.	„ with mushrooms.
„ broiled.	„ with olives.
Ox tongue with sharp	„ with Madeira wine.
sauce.	Ox palate fricasseed.
„ with sour-	„ Italian.
krout.	„ Lyonnaise.
„ with vege-	Tripe fricasseed.
tables.	„ Lyonnaise.

MUTTON.

Made dishes.

Mutton-chops.	Roast leg of mutton and
„ with vegetables.	gravy.
„ with sorrel.	„ with French
„ with endive.	beans.
„ with spinage.	Mutton fillet.
„ with peas.	„ maitre-d'hôtel.
Breast with crumbs and	„ with bread crumbs.
gravy.	„ venison.
„ with French beans	„ with mushrooms.
„ with tomato sauce.	Sheep's trotters fricas-
Roast leg of mutton and	seed.
gravy.	„ fried.
„ with spinage.	„ with vinegar and
„ with endive.	oil.
„ with sorrel.	Kidneys roasted.
	„ stewed.

VEAL.

Sweetbread with gravy.	Fricandeau with vegeta-
„ with spinage.	bles.
„ with endive.	„ with French
„ financière.	beans.
„ with sorrel.	„ with tomato
Fricandeau with gravy.	sauce.
„ with sorrel.	Veal-cutlet plain.
„ with endive.	„ with small herbs.
„ with spinage.	„ in paper.

Veal-cutlet financière.	Veal tendons fricasseed.
Cutlet with vegetables.	„ with endive.
„ Milanaise.	„ with spinage.
Calf's brains fricasseed.	„ with sorrel.
„ scolloped.	„ with peas.
„ fried.	Calf's head.
„ tongue with sharp	„ liver and bacon.
sauce.	„ fricasseed.
„ with vegetables.	„ feet with oil and
„ liver fried.	vinegar.
„ fried.	„ fricasseed.
„ with small onions.	Kidneys stewed in wine
„ with mushrooms.	and mushrooms.
Roasted veal in its jelly.

Boiling.

BOILING.

This word should be banished by every cook.

In the process of boiling, a change takes place according to the heat that is applied to the meat; the juices mix with the water and solids dissolve, and thus the water, containing the goodness of the meat, usually finds its way into the sink. Recollect that the more the meat is subjected to a boiling temperature the more it becomes indigestible.

The meat should be put into cold water and carefully watched until it comes to a gentle simmer, the temperature should not be raised beyond a simmer, and twenty minutes for each pound will be the best guess of its being sufficiently cooked.

Observe : You may take it as a certain rule that whenever you smell the odour of cookery it is a sign of bad cooking—the juices are evaporating in air.

That homely joint, the leg of mutton, may, by adopting a French refinement, be turned into a dinner fitted for the highest enjoyment. A leg of mutton.

Make a bed, at the bottom of your ham saucepan, composed of—

Some slices of ham or bacon.

Bones of anything broken.

Slices of mutton or beef.

(These two are mostly thrown into the hog-tub.)

Four carrots, six onions (cut up).

Three bay-leaves.

Some thyme.

Three cloves.

A bunch of parsley.

Some leeks.

Celery.

Salt, pepper, mace, and allspice.

A small quantity of any gravy or soup that you may have by you.

Simmer gently for about five and a half hours. Lift it from its bed, strain as much of the gravy as is requisite, free from fat, and pour over and serve ; put away the bed in a clean pan, and the following day make a potage, of course taking away the fat.

Sometimes intelligence is buried in a hole, or little known. There is a brazier, residing in Shoemaker-row, Doctors' Commons, who has invented a double saucepan, the space between the two being filled with water, and the meat in the inner saucepan is cooked without water. A leg of mutton, and a pair of fowls, and a knuckle of ham, may all be cooked at one and the same time, and to the moment, by your first ascertaining their weight and calculating the time that each would take to cook, and putting them in according to the time they would require, and you have the advantage of saving all the gravy that escapes in the cooking, which remains at the bottom of the strainer.

This saucepan will also do for boiling a turbot or other fish, and if you go to the expense of having one made to the size of your fish strainer, it may be lifted out on to the dish without the fish being broken, and may be cooked with the same appearance as it had on the fishmonger's slab.

This saucepan is excellent either on the gas-stove, or hot-plate, or on board a yacht, or on a turf-fire in the Highlands; and in boiling you cook the joint according to its weight, giving twenty minutes for every pound of meat.

ROASTING A HAUNCH OF VENISON.

The present vicious mode of roasting is that the greater part of the succulent juices are evaporated and confiscated to the dripping-pan. Abandon the spit and the expensive kitchen roasting. If you have not a gas stove, order a cylinder high and broad enough to roast a haunch of venison; this to be surrounded within by a ring with perforations, with a plug to which a flexible tube may be attached when wanted, and so led to any convenient spot in the kitchen, or even in the library. No smoke or smell will come from it if only sufficient heat be turned on. If the haunch weighs twenty-five pounds, give it twenty minutes for each pound; and so you may cook any joint or turkey, taking care to roast it according to its weight, and it will be done to the moment you require it. Your reward will be, at the very first incision of the carving-knife, an inundation of gravy; and in the pan will be all the clean dripping, which, if you eat pies or puddings, is superior to butter or lard, and under the dripping will be found a jelly that will be a great addition to any delicate dish that you may wish to add to.

A haunch of venison.

BEEF.

The neatest and easiest to carve is the wing-rib, and the two adjoining, boned and rolled, will weigh about ten pounds; and, if properly roasted, they will contain sufficient gravy, but if more be thought desirable, look under the dripping of a former cooked joint, put the jelly into the Dresden pipkin, warm

Ribs of beef.

it, and add a tea-spoonful of garlic vinegar, and pour over.

The Dutch have excellent beef, and they always treat it as follows :

Put a few cloves and salt and a little pepper in the crevices and over the beef, then put a sheet of paper steeped in vinegar over it, turn it over and do the same on the other side, let it remain four days, turning it every day.

In choosing beef, the small Scotch heifer, four or five-year-old beef, is the best.

MUTTON.

The Welsh, Scotch, and Southdown are the best, and four or five-year-old, when they are to be obtained.

VEAL.

The white, with plenty of fat, is the preferable.

BEEF-STEAK, OR MUTTON OR PORK CHOPS, ETC.

The best of all methods is to cook them by the reflected heat of a gas stove, seven minutes on each side ; the whole of the gravy remains in the meat, which is nicely browned.

Beef-steak to cook.

If you have not the advantage of a gas stove, make up the fire half an hour before the steak is wanted ; put on some small pieces of coke, which will clear and make a bright fire ; heat the grilliron and place it on the fire in as slanting a position as you can, and the fat will run down the bars and so prevent it making a flare; put on the steaks and turn them frequently with the steak-tongs; be sure not to stick the fork into them. Of course they will be browned and cooked according to the heat of the fire, which cannot be timed as it would by the gas stove.

On board a yacht they must be done by hanging a double gridiron before the fire.

SWEETS, PASTRY, ETC.

Sweets.

It is strange to think how many persons make themselves ill by the thoughtless way in which they eat. If they would only consider their stomach as sensitive as their palate, they never would put sweets on the top of a good dinner. They ferment, and that is the cause of the disagreeable sensation known to all that eat unwisely. Such persons would do well to compose a dish of a little potage, a little fish, a little poultry, a little game, a little of the joint of meat, and some of the sweets, and some of the other things, and mash them all up together with a quantity of wine, equal to what they drink; this would make a dish like what they put into their stomachs; then let them consider the verdigris, the dirt, and the crock, and try to eat it, and if their palate rejects it, how can they expect their stomach should make such a meal of such stuff without grumbling.

The Amphitryon that gives sweets with first-class wines destroys the credit that is due to himself, and unintentionally aids the hypocritical purveyor of sloe-juice, who, by deceit, diverts attention from his wickedness, and covers his criminality with sweetmeats.

Sweets to choose.

Omelette with rum.	Plum-pudding with rum.
„ soufflée.	Cream meringos.
„ with sugar.	„ with preserves.
„ with apples.	„ with lemon.
„ with sweetmeats	„ with orange- flower water.
Apple fritters.	„ with coffee.
Peach fritters.	Croquettes of rice.
Apricot fritters.	„ Madeira.
Charlotte of apples.	Meringo jelly.
„ Russe.	Charlotte jelly.
Plum - pudding with brandy.

SAUCE FOR WILD-DUCKS.

Many men have received the honour of a baronetcy for services of far less importance than the invention of the following sauce. If the inventor had received what he was entitled to, we might look for him in the peerage :

One salt-spoon of salt.

Half to three-quarters of cayenne.

One dessert-spoon of lemon-juice.

One „ „ pounded sugar.

One „ „ catchup.

Two dessert-spoons of Harvey's sauce.

Three „ port wine.

To be well mixed, heated, and poured over the bird, it having been previously sliced, so that the sauce may mix with its own gravy. The duck must not be too much roasted, and must be put in the dish without anything.

TOMATO SAUCE

is excellent with pork-chops, roast goose, and tame ducks, especially if you add to it a glass of claret, some white pepper, and sugar.

The following are pretty additions to either hot or cold meats or fish.

SALAD,

For Eight Persons, should be as fresh as can be got, and well picked and cleaned; and, the very last thing, well cut up and drained, and dried in a clean cloth, and not to be put to the mixture until it is to be put on the table:

The yolks of four new-laid eggs, well beaten.

Three table-spoons of fresh salad oil, poured in drop by drop whilst stirring.

Two ditto of French vinegar, to be gently stirred in.

One ditto of anchovy sauce, to be gently stirred in.

A tea-spoonful of pounded sugar.

Some cayenne pepper.

A tea-spoonful of garlic, or tarragon vinegar.

A couple of eschallots, chopped very fine.

Four table-spoonfuls of cream.

BETROOT.

A fine head to be boiled until tender, and when cold, a few minutes before wanted to be cut in slices, and pour over the following sauce :

Mix a tea-spoonful of made mustard with two table-spoonfuls of salad oil ; when well mixed, add a table-spoonful of French vinegar, and, last of all, three or four table-spoonfuls of thick cream, and a little salt to taste.

MAYONNAISE.

The yolk of two eggs, well beaten ; let fall drop by drop of fresh Florence oil until you think sufficient, then let fall drop by drop of French vinegar until it is to your taste ; add salt and pepper ; take care always to turn the same way.

MAYONNAISE (Spanish fashion).

Three yolks of eggs, six table-spoonfuls of fresh Florence oil, two table-spoonfuls and a half of French vinegar ; let these ingredients be mixed with care until they look like cream, then chop some parsley and two eschallots as fine as possible, to be put in one by one and beaten up until of a good consistency.

VEGETABLES.

Vegetables
to choose.

Celery in gravy.	White French beans.
Broad beans.	„ maître-d'hôtel.
Salsifis in gravy.	„ with oil.
„ fried.	„ stewed in butter.
„ with juice.	Green French beans.
Asparagus with plain butter.	„ stewed in butter.
„ with oil.	Potatoes maître-d'hôtel.
„ with green-peas.	„ fried.
Artichokes with sauce.	„ Hollandaise.
Cauliflowers with sauce.	„ stewed in butter.
„ au gratin.	Spinage with gravy.
Green-peas with sugar.	„ with sugar.
„ with ham.	Maccaroni au gratin.
	„ Italienne.

EGGS.

Eggs.

Eggs fried in tomato sauce.	Omelette with fine herbs.
„ poached.	„ with ham.

A PLAIN OMELETTE.

Three eggs, yolks and whites, well beat up with a whisk, one salt-spoonful of salt, mustard, and half a one of pepper, two or three table-spoonfuls of cream or milk; beat all well up together, and fry on a slow fire in a hot frying-pan, in butter or refined lard; as soon as the omelette is set it is done; it should be rolled up like a jam-roller before serving.

OMELETTE AUX FINES HERBES.

As above, with the addition of very finely-chopped parsley.

All kinds of savoury meats, mushrooms, or any description of game, chopped very fine, may be mixed with the omelette, and then the omelette is a savoury one.

Drinks.

DRINKS.—(Malt Liquor.)

Many a man is paralysed by the water he drinks in his tea. Look to your cistern, to your pump, and to your well; the water in your cistern takes up the lead, your pump may be rotten, and your well may receive poisonous drainings. Look to this: many lives have been lost by this want of thought; every cistern should be thoroughly cleaned every three months.

Everybody likes a glass of malt liquor if it be good. The beer brewed in Bavaria is the pleasantest and most agreeable to any I have ever tasted, and the next to it is the beer called Indian Pale Ale, brewed by John Muir and Sons, of the Cannongate, Edinburgh, a brewery established upwards of two hundred years, who pursue the same process of brewing as was used at that period; it is very far superior to the modern process. The beers called Bass and Allsopp's cannot stand by the side of it, and it has this advantage, that the persons afflicted with stone may drink it with pleasure—with impunity—although probably the water from their cistern or pump might be forbidden. It was analysed by the late Dr. Prout, who told the patient that he might drink it with impunity. If this beer can be obtained of the October brew, it is the best of any, especially if brewed on a cold, clear, blowing day. From November to June, malt liquor, if sound, may be drank; but from June to November, unless the beer be sound, weak sound claret, or claret-and-water, is to be preferred.

BOTTLING.

All kinds of malt liquors and wines should be bottled in bright clear weather, because in cloudy weather damp adheres to the bottle, and if bottled in such weather the beer or wine will never be bright.

PUNCH

Is all the better for keeping.

To make thirty gallons: Brandy, two gallons; rum, five gallons; sugar, thirty-six pounds; the peel of a hundred lemons cut extremely thin; two bottles of curaçoa. This will take about twenty-two gallons of water.

CIDER-CUP.

Two bottles of cider, two glasses of sherry, one of liquor.

The juice of one lemon and half of the peel cut thin, two table-spoonfuls of pounded sugar, and the white of an egg beaten to a froth and poured over it. To be well iced.

A COOLING DRINK.

Dissolve six table-spoonfuls of pounded sugar in a tumbler of water, pour it into a large jug with a bottle of claret; stir it, and add one bottle of champagne and two of soda-water, and well ice.

CHERRY BRANDY.

One quart of brandy, one pound of morella cherries (cut off half the stalks), half-pound of white sugar-candy.

TO BREW PALE ALE (A HUNDRED GALLONS).

Nine or ten bushels of malt; twenty-three to twenty-seven pounds of Kentish hops; three pounds of camomile flowers simmered in a jar (put in the camomiles and hops at the same time). Boil the malt until the liquor begins to fine itself, and this is the time to add the camomiles and hops.

PRESERVATION OF FOOD.

Meat, poultry, game, and fish, never recover their flavour after they have been frozen, and the fish that have been slouced in water, or, as the cheats call it, preserved in ice, is not worth cooking, and if eaten, frequently brings on dysentery.

There is an idea that charcoal will preserve meat, poultry, and game; it is a mistake; it may keep it from smelling, but whilst it draws away the taint, it draws away its goodness.

The only way really to preserve animal food is to keep it in as low a temperature as possible, and constantly wiped, so that no moisture attaches to it.*

New-laid eggs may be preserved by packing them in jars with their pointed ends downwards; cork the jars as nearly air-tight as possible; chickens have been hatched after a period of four months from eggs so preserved.

Your larder should be placed as much out of the influence of the sun as possible, where it will get a current of air through it.

Meat may be perfectly sweet and wholesome, but if placed near a drain or cesspool, or in the neighbourhood of meat already tainted, or touched by a woman out of health, will in forty-eight hours become unfit for the human stomach. {“Nothing taints sound lungs sooner than the breath of consumptive lungs.”—Harvey on Consumption.

* If meat, poultry, or game should become a little tainted, wipe it immediately. Take a piece of clean rag dipped in proligneous acid, rub it wherever it be so, afterwards wash in clean water, dry it, and roast the same day.

The
yachtman

It is a great pull for a yachtman to know that stews or soups may be preserved by warming up occasionally, and if there be a suspicion that they are likely to go sour, throw in a glass of brandy occasionally, and they will keep good to Gibraltar.

MILK PRESERVING.

Sometimes it happens that the milk, although fresh, goes sour in the course of a night; consequently, if at sea, there is none for breakfast. Obtain as many quart bottles as will last the voyage, let them be chemically clean, fill them with pure milk, put in as many lumps of loaf-sugar as will not make your tea too sweet, put the bottles into a cold caldron of water, and just as it comes to the boil, take out the bottles, and cork and put them away in as cool a place as the yacht will afford, with the corks downwards.

INDIAN CURRY POWDER

is mostly compounded by Jews, and of the worst materials, and when brought to England has lost its flavour and not worth using, and if much eaten will cause paralysis. The following is a genuine receipt; get it made up at Hanburys', chemists, Plough-court, Lombard-street; desire them to put it into six or eight small bottles, so that you may not have to expose it too often to the atmosphere; keep it from the light, or it loses its colour and quality :

Twelve ounces of turmeric.

Four ounces of dry ginger.

Four ounces of white pepper.

Four ounces of coriander seed.

One ounce and a half of cayenne.

Two ounces of cardamom seed.

Two ounces of cummin seed.

One ounce of fenugreek seed.

A SPANISH COOK'S RECEIPT FOR BOILING A SPANISH HAM.

Put the ham into cold water to soak from sixteen to eighteen hours ; scrape and trim it well, putting into cold water to simmer. Add to the water a tea-cupful of vinegar, and a large tea-cupful of brown sugar : simmer five hours. A pint of sherry wine put into the water instead of the vinegar greatly improves the flavour of the ham.

THE END.

C. WHITING, BEAUFORT HOUSE, STRAND.

